Presented at the Annual Research Dinner

St. Louis, Missouri

April 24, 1987

This lecture was given at an annual research dinner in St. Louis, Missouri to an audience someone acquainted with, but not expert in AIDS. It was four days after I had given the last lecture on AIDS, and sixteen days after I gave the identical lecture in Philadelphia as the Pasquariello Lecture at the Children's Hospital there. The invitations for speeches were coming so fast that where it was possible to double-up on speeches, we certainly tried to do that. For that reason only, the title page will be reproduced here for completeness for those who are historically interested.
