

Introduction

Purpose

This bibliography was compiled in order to provide a resource for scholars and researchers who wish to access the universe of material relating to Agriculture and Rural Life in Arkansas, 1820-1945.

The compilation aims to list the universe of publications which make up the historical record of Arkansas' agriculture, rural economy and societal activities. The rural and agricultural world is viewed as group activities of people who live in the countryside and the effects these activities have on the farm people themselves. This includes outside influences as well as those within the state which affected the activities and character of rural people.

Scope of Coverage

Included are books, monographs and pamphlets published before 1946, including Arkansas government documents, theses and dissertations published in or about Arkansas. Also included are compilations of laws applicable to agriculture and rural life, census material and reports, and studies generated by the Federal Government and its agencies. Of particular interest to researchers is a complete listing of all the Arkansas Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletins, 1886-1945, indexed by author and subject.

Excluded from this listing are manuscripts and archival material and colonial tracts, charters, or other pre-1820 publications, and newspapers. The decision not to include newspapers was based on the fact that a recent comprehensive bibliography of Arkansas newspapers has already been compiled, Arkansas Union List of Newspapers (Fayetteville: University Libraries, 1993).

Notes on Coverage and Subject Areas

Because Arkansas had an overwhelmingly rural population, and its economy was primarily based on agriculture during the period covered, the selection process was made intentionally broad to include nearly all areas of economic and social activity in the state. This was done in order to give researchers comparative materials (i.e. urban/rural, agricultural/manufacturing) to work with and was based on the premise that the rural and agricultural influences were pervasive in Arkansas and all facets of life in the state were touched by them in some way.

Arrangement

The bibliography is arranged within three broad categories: Agriculture, Rural Life, and Miscellaneous. The Agriculture and Rural Life categories are further broken down into several subject areas as outlined on the contents page. Subject and author indices are included to enable researchers to find relevant information. A sample entry explaining the format of the bibliographic information is presented on p.vii.

The Agriculture subject areas contain those entries which deal in some way with the process or development of production agriculture. For instance, the Agricultural Economics subject area is broadly defined to include material on banking practices in Arkansas as well as specific material dealing with farm credit, farm management, crop prices and production costs. Additional material relating to economics, again broadly conceived, can be found under Rural Life—Economics. The Agricultural Extension and Agricultural Education subject area deals with the dispensing of agricultural information via the various private and public agricultural extension agencies and specific educational programs dealing with agriculture in public schools and higher education. Additional material about general educational programs in the state can be found under Rural Life—Education. There is less translation between the other subject areas in Agriculture and those found under Rural Life than in the two mentioned above, but researchers can consult the subject index at the back of the volume to find additional entries.

The Rural Life subject areas are broadly conceived because of Arkansas' overwhelmingly rural character. The entries include material that encompasses the state as a whole in order to provide comparative material. For example, under the Rural Life—Transportation subject area, researchers will find reports giving state-wide traffic and road use statistics which can be used either to make comparisons or to concentrate on a specific region. The Rural Life—Education subject area includes a substantial amount of material that are state-wide reports which are included for comparative purposes as well as many for specific locales. Educational surveys done for every county in the state that were generated by the Arkansas Department of Education are also included. The Rural Life—Development subject area includes industrial and manufacturing development plans, promotional material generated by private concerns and by state agencies describing the states' natural resources, various "public improvement" programs undertaken by New Deal agencies operating in Arkansas, and rural electrification efforts undertaken in the state. Under this heading a researcher can also find immigration and promotional tracts from Arkansas' earliest days that continue up through the twentieth century.

In the Miscellaneous area the researcher will find books, handbooks, and pamphlets describing the state in more general terms as well as items that did not fit the other areas but were considered important enough to include in the bibliography.

Other Relevant Sources

Other sources published after 1946 but dealing with the same period are listed here for researchers wanting to consult contemporary interpretations and additional bibliographic material.
