CATALYZING CHANGE
Profiles of Cornell Cooperative Extension Educators from Greene, Tompkins, and Erie Counties, New York

Edited by Scott J. Peters, Daniel J. O'Connell, Theodore R. Alter, and Allison L. H. Jack

This new book is a collection of eight practitioner profiles of the community education and development work of Cornell Cooperative Extension educators from Greene, Tompkins, and Erie counties in upstate New York. It is the second volume in an on-going series that is designed to provoke and inform critical reflection about the public purposes and significance of Extension work, not only in New York State but also throughout the national Cooperative Extension System. The profiles in this book challenge prevailing views and presumptions about what Extension is and how and why it matters. They help us to see and understand Extension as a non-neutral force for change, where Extension education is not only or mainly about providing information and answering questions, but catalyzing change.

Paperback (187 pages), $10

“This book is an excellent read for persons working in any aspect of education or community enhancement. It provides tremendous insight into the passion behind the work and the immeasurable value of human interaction.”
