DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES: The position is located in the Office of Research Development, Process Development Division (PDD) which is part of the National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL). The functions of this Division are formulation and development of alloys for use in high temperature applications; processes for efficient carbon management, improving power plant efficiency, and reduction of power plant emissions; improving the efficiency of high temperature melting or smelting systems; efficient production of prototype parts, castings, and/or plate or sheet from ferrous, non-ferrous, and refractory alloys; recovery and/or recycling of valuable materials from wastes; and improvement of material production by melting or smelting. The NETL Liquid Metal Processing Laboratory and its associated research program are also located within this Division. The Division coordinates planning and implementation with ORD Focus Area leaders, particularly the Focus Area Lead, Materials Science, works closely with other ORD divisions, and actively participates in teams across other offices in NETL.

As a senior researcher or team leader, the incumbent plans, directs, and performs research investigations on complex problems. The primary focus of this research is in the formulation, development, melting/casting, heat treating, and fabrication of ferrous, non-ferrous, reactive and refractory alloys with an emphasis on applications in high temperature, extreme environments such as typically found in fossil fuel fired energy systems including ultra-super critical steam turbines, next generation gas turbines or solid oxide fuel cells. Emphasis is placed upon alloy design for extreme service environment applications and the subsequent development and evaluation of the alloy for that environment. Some tools commonly utilized include phase/formation/microstructural modeling software such as ThermoCalc®, DICTRA, JMatPro, VASP, and computational fluid dynamics modeling with software such as Fluent, Flow3D or ProCast. Other tools available for alloy development include button furnace, vacuum arc remelting furnaces, electro-slag remelting furnaces, vacuum and air induction melting furnaces (melting capabilities span the scale from tens-of-grams to hundreds of pounds); facilities to perform hot forging and rolling, cold rolling, and hot isostatic press; in-house chemical analysis including wet chemistry and SEM, TEM, XRF, XRD, ICP, LECO, DTA, TGA, DSC, dilatometry, laser flash diffusivity; oxidation and corrosion facilities available for a number of gaseous species and temperature ranges; mechanical testing includes tensile, compression, fatigue and creep at room through elevated temperatures, and hardness testing.

NOTE: Under a new law, the Defense Authorization Act of November 18, 1997, veterans' preference is accorded anyone who served on active duty during the Gulf War from August 2, 1990, through January 2, 1992. The law grants preference to anyone who is otherwise eligible and who served on active duty during this period regardless of where the person served or for how long. Otherwise eligible means that a person must have been separated from the service under honorable conditions and have served continuously for a minimum of 24 months or the full period for which called or ordered to active duty. The law also authorizes the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal for service in Bosnia during Operation Joint Endeavor (November 29, 1995-December 20, 1996) and Operation Joint Guard (December 20, 1996-to be determined). The Secretary of each military department decides which members are eligible. The award of the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal is qualifying for veterans' preference.

Section 1111 of Title XI of the National Defense Authorization Act expands the definition of a veteran in 5 U.S.C. 2108(1) to include individuals who served on active duty for more than 180 consecutive days, other than for training, any part of which occurred during the period beginning September 11, 2001, and ending on the date prescribed by Presidential proclamation or by law as the last day of Operation Iraqi Freedom.
