

Geothermal Questions/Answers:

I am interested in making my house more energy efficient. Where can I go for information about installing heat pumps?

For heat pump information, go to the International Ground Source Heat Pump Association website.

You can also find local contractors on the GeoExchange website.

Where can I find geothermal maps?

For good geothermal maps, go to the Department of Energy Geothermal Technologies Program website.

Where can I find statistics about geothermal energy?

For geothermal statistics, go to the U.S. Department of Energy, Energy Information Administration website.

Where can I go for basic information about geothermal energy?

On our What is Geothermal?, we have a brochure you can download that covers the basics on geothermal energy. We have a number of good websites for children on our Contacts & Links page, under Public Information and K-12 School Age Sites.

Where can I go for intermediate and advanced information about geothermal energy?

Any one of the links under the heading University Level Geothermal Information on our Contacts & Links page is a great source for more advanced information. We suggest trying the Great Basin Center for Geothermal Energy, University of Nevada, Reno website.

I want to find out about information about power plants located in the U.S. Where do I go?

Go to the Geothermal Energy Association website. Click on the Information tab on top and you will find this information.

Library Access

My access to the library has expired. What do I do now?

You need to renew your membership. Visit our website www.geothermal.org. Click on our Membership link on the left. Scroll down to the bottom and follow instructions to renew your membership.

An article I want is not available as a PDF. How can I get that article?

Email or call our Library Associate, cmoua@geothermal.org, with the article citation and she will gladly fax or mail a copy of the article free of charge as a member.

Can I receive a PDF or hard copy of an article if I am a non-member?

There is non-member access on our library site. Photocopies can be obtained by filling out the order form on this page.
