ABOUT HOFA

Operating a Federally Accredited Organic Certification Program

🌱 HOFA Mission Statement 🌱

Our mission is to protect the life of the land and the health of our communities through education about organic land care practices. We believe that developing and strengthening certified organic farms will enhance Hawaii's many fragile ecosystems and be a base for a local sustainable economy.

Hawaii Organic Farmers Association (HOFA)

is a non-profit membership organization that administers organic certification in the State of Hawaii. HOFA promotes organic and sustainable agriculture through research, education, and by providing organic certification services in compliance with the USDA's National Organic Program.

What Services does HOFA Provide?

🌱 CERTIFICATION:

HOFA is federally accredited to offer Crop, Apiary, Livestock, and Processing/Handling certifications.

🌱 FARM APPRENTICE PROGRAM:

HOFA's Farm Apprenticeship Program is a collaborative arrangement between HOFA certified farms and individuals seeking work trade opportunities on organic farms in Hawaii. The Farm Apprenticeship Program is for people of all ages to learn the basics of sustainable organic agriculture through hands-on experience and instruction.

🌱 INFORMATION & EDUCATION:

HOFA offers many publications and resources to assist producers and consumers with tropical organic agriculture. HOFA conducts workshops, conferences and participates in tradeshow. HOFA has a video, 'Growing toward the Light', which showcases Hawaii's organic farms.

🌱 RESEARCH:

HOFA collaborates with farmers and researchers on projects pertaining to organic and sustainable tropical agriculture.

Who is HOFA?

- 🌱 HOFA members are people like you who care about the food they eat and its impact on the environment. Our membership is made up of local organic farmers, distributors, retailers, students, and consumers wishing to support and promote organic agriculture in Hawaii. You do not need to be an organic producer to be a member. Members receive regular newsletters and notices of events and workshops.
- 🌱 HOFA is organized with a seven-member volunteer Board of Directors. The Board represents all of the counties in the State of Hawaii. HOFA has three part-time administrators to facilitate day-to-day operations of the organization and maintains an office at 474 Kalanikoa St. #203 in Hilo.
- 🌱 HOFA's Organic Certification Program is administered by qualified HOFA members appointed to the Certification Committee. A team of independent and IOIA trained inspectors provide contract services to HOFA's Certification Program.

The HOFA logo and seal are registered trademarks and may be used with approval upon organic certification status. The HOFA logo identifies products that are certified organic in the State of Hawaii.

The USDA Organic seal may also be used only on organic products that have been certified under the requirements of the National Organic Program and must contain a minimum of 95% organically produced or approved ingredients.

HOFA APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Do you have a desire to work on an organic farm in Hawaii in exchange for knowledge about tropical agriculture?

Join HOFA's Farm Apprenticeship Program, become a HOFA member, and connect yourself with organic farms looking for help throughout the year.

HOFA's Apprenticeship Program was established in response to numerous inquiries about work trade opportunities on organic farms in Hawaii. The program is designed with both the apprentice and the farmer in mind. Our goal is to connect you with organic farms/homesteads that can provide something in exchange for your labor (room and board, a stipend, or both).

The Apprenticeship Program is for people of all ages from all over the world to come together and learn the basics of sustainable organic tropical agriculture.

APPRENTICESHIP DETAILS

When: Farming is a year round activity in the Hawaiian Islands. If you are interested in working on or harvesting a particular crop, be sure to ask the farmer what time of year that activity takes place. Some crops, like pineapples for example, are generally harvested in July and August, while bananas and papayas can be harvested year round.

Where: HOFA has host farms located throughout the Hawaii Island chain. At this time most of our farms are located on Maui and the Big Island, with a small hand full spread throughout Oahu and Kauai. The Hawaiian Islands are especially unique in that they contain 11 of the 13 microclimates found throughout the world. If you have a preference for dry, wet, coastal, or up-mountain climates please take some time to research the location of the farm you are interested in visiting.

How: How long you wish to stay and what will be exchanged for labor is up to you and the farmer to negotiate. The Host Farm list that you will receive after applying to the program will contain information about each of the farms. It is up to you to contact the farms that interest you the most and work out the trade agreement and length of stay, prior to arriving. Inquire about transportation arrangements as some farms are remotely located.

What to Bring: What you bring depends on where you will be staying. In general, we recommend good working shoes or boots, a raincoat, gloves, appropriate work clothing, a sleeping bag, and a tent if necessary. Check with your host farm for suggestions.

Please contact the HOFA Office for more information or for an application.

INFORMATIONAL GLOSSARY

Info Glossary

Biodynamic

Both a concept and a practice, biodynamics owes its origin to the spiritual insights and perceptions of Dr. Rudolf Steiner, an Austrian philosopher and scientist who lived at the turn of the 20th century. It is a method of agriculture which views the farm as a whole organism, blending the ecological with the spiritual. One of the most popular biodynamic farmers today is “Farmer John” Peterson. His cookbook, “Farmer John’s Cookbook: Real Dirt on Vegetables” (Gibbs Smith, 2006), includes a description of the “biological—dynamic” method of agriculture.

Bird Friendly

Initiated by the Smithsonian Migratory Bird Center, this program allows organic certifiers to identify coffee that has been grown using shade management practices that protect bird habitats. Look for the bird friendly seal.

Certified Organic

Organic farming is based on an ecological system that maintains and replenishes soil fertility. In general, organic foods must be produced without synthetic fertilizers, pesticides, herbicides, growth hormones, and antibiotics. The USDA’s National Organic Program sets standards for organic foods, whether they are produced in the U.S., or imported from other countries. Organically raised livestock must be given 100 percent organic feed, and have access to the outdoors, including access to pasture for ruminants, such as cattle, sheep, and goats. Genetic engineering, radiation and sewage sludge are prohibited. Any food that is sold, labeled or represented as “organic,” must be certified. A USDA-approved inspector visits the farm or processing company to confirm that standards are met. A certification agency such as Hawaii Organic Farmers Association (HOFA) ensures that growers and handlers are meeting the strict uniform standards outlined under the National Organic Program. Products that are certified may be indicated by the USDA seal or HOFA logo.

The organic seal is not mandatory, but when present, it tells you that a product is at least 95 percent organic. Organic farmers who choose not to certify because of the extra cost or paperwork can’t label or market their products as “organic” but they may use environmentally-friendly terms in direct marketing, such as “no-spray”; “natural”, “locally-grown”, “free-range”, or “hormone and anti-biotic free”. However since none of these terms have third-party verification, it’s up to the consumer to find out what the producer means.

Community Garden

Community gardens play an integral role in developing local food systems that build community and provide healthy food for residents. These are small plots of land allocated to individuals, families, and groups by an organization that holds title or lease to the land, sometimes for rent, sometimes simply as a grant of land.

INFORMATIONAL GLOSSARY

Info Glossary

Community Supported Agriculture

Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) describes a relationship where consumers purchase shares of a farmer's crop in advance of the growing season. Each week, the farmer harvests and assembles a box of fresh produce; shareholders may pick up their boxes at the farm, delivery sites, or home delivery may be offered.

Fair Trade Certified

This label tells consumers that farmers and workers receive a contracted fair price, use sustainable farming practices and do not abuse child labor. Look for "fair trade certified" coffee, chocolate and tea. In addition, organic and shade grown labels ensure environmental stewardship that protects wildlife habitats, farmers and children.

Free Range

USDA allows poultry producers to use a "free range" or "free roaming" label if they can show that the birds have "been allowed access to the outside". There is no legal definition for "free-range" eggs.

Grass fed/Pastured

Grass fed animals are raised naturally on pasture, as opposed to being kept in confinement and fed an unnatural diet of high carbohydrate grains. Pasturing livestock and poultry is ecologically sustainable, humane, and produces meat, dairy and eggs that are healthier, safer, and more nutritious.

Heritage and Heirloom

Heritage and heirloom both mean the same thing, though "heritage" is usually used to describe animals, while "heirloom" refers generally to kinds of plants. These terms describe varieties of animals and crops that have unique genetic traits or were grown or raised many years ago. Heirloom vegetables are generally open-pollinated cultivars distinguished by age and quality.

Natural

"Natural" does not mean organic. In fact, when it comes to the majority of foods and beverages, which are regulated by the US food and Drug Administration, the term natural has no solid legal definition. On the other hand, USDA defines "natural" meat and poultry products as those without any artificial or synthetic ingredients, and not more than "minimally processed". In addition, the label must explain the use of the word "natural" such as "no added colorings". To find out exactly what a manufacturer means by "natural," read ingredient labels carefully, and shop at markets where you can trust the people who do the purchasing. If questions remain, contact the producer or manufacturer directly, to clarify exactly what they mean by "natural."

Naturally Grown/ Sustainable

Some farms prefer not to pursue an organic certification, but follow organic or sustainable practices. Sustainable agriculture refers to the ability of a farm to produce food indefinitely, without causing irreversible damage to ecosystem health. Sustainable agriculture is designed to continue indefinitely, supporting communities without exhausting resources or damaging the environment. It is based on farming practices that are productive and profitable, yet socially responsible and environmentally sensitive.

No Antibiotics Added (Red Meat and Poultry)

"No antibiotics added" may be used on labels with sufficient documentation to USDA proving the animals were raised without antibiotics.

INFORMATIONAL GLOSSARY

Info Glossary

No Hormones

Pork and poultry: Here's a surprise. The USDA does not allow the use of hormones in raising hogs or poultry. Therefore, the claim "no hormones added" cannot be used on the labels of pork or poultry unless followed by a statement that says, "Federal regulations prohibit the use of hormones". Beef: the term "no hormones administered" may be approved on labels if sufficient documentation is provided to show USDA that no hormones were used in raising the animals.

Permaculture

Applicable to food production, land use, and community building, permaculture is an ethical design system which aims to create sustainable habitats by following nature's patterns. The term "permaculture" is derived from permanent agriculture, or permanent culture.

Sustainable Seafood

Refers to fish that are caught or farmed with consideration for the future of fishing, the protection of individual marine species, and for the ocean's ecological balance as a whole. Restaurants participating in the Sustainable Seafood Initiative make every effort to obtain seafood from sustainable, domestic and local sources.

What is a local food system?

It used to be that all food was local. You grew it yourself, or purchased it from the corner store. Today, it's the supermarket that serves as most families' food source. The fresh food found there is far more likely to have come from the other side of the world than from down the street. Indeed, the average food item travels 1,500 miles before reaching your plate. A local food system is a community-based model where consumers buy fresh food grown by local producers. The best way to support a local food system is to shop at farmers' markets, find a CSA (Community Supported Agriculture) group to join, or locate the stores and restaurants in your area that make a serious effort to buy products grown by local farmers.

Buying sustainable and organic food grown within your local area has some very real benefits:

- ♻️ Fresher food tastes better and is better for you
- ♻️ Dollars stay in your local community
- ♻️ Oil consumption falls
- ♻️ Pollution and soil erosion are reduced
- ♻️ Pastoral rural landscapes are preserved
- ♻️ Small family farms thrive

There's a lot that you can do to support the creation of your local food system.

Here are 5 great ways to get started:

1. Go to your local farmers' market and buy from organic and sustainable farmers.
2. Share the stories about where your food comes from with your friends and family—and bring them to the farmers' market with you the next time you go.
3. Ask your grocer where the produce comes from, and purchase fresh, locally grown foods when stocked.
4. Patronize the restaurants and stores that support local farmers.
5. Get involved with Hawaii Organic Farmers Association: become a member, attend events, farm tours, field days, conferences—or volunteer.

Make it a point to eat local foods and savor Hawaii's seasonal bounty!

ORGANIC SEEDS AND SEED SOURCES

 With the adoption of the Federal Organic Rule, organic producers are now required to use organically grown seeds and planting stock at all times unless an equivalent variety is not commercially available. The only exception to commercial availability is that organically produced seed must be used for the production of edible sprouts. This section of the Federal Rule can be found in 205.204, Seeds and planting stock practice standard.

The intent of this requirement in the Federal Organic Rule is to ensure the support and livelihood of organic seed production and organic crop production methods. Finding organic seeds and being able to sufficiently document commercial availability can be tough at times for organic farmers. Especially farmers with diverse crop production and annual vegetables or herbs.

Why would an organic farmer choose to purchase seeds not produced by the same methods they adhere to?

Price for one. Organically produced seeds, as with all organic products, are more intensively managed and cared for which drives up the cost of production. Included in this cost is the price of certification; the consumers insurance that the product has been produced by a uniform set of organic standards.

A second reason a farmer may choose non-organically produced seeds is commercial availability. Being that organic seeds are grown on a much smaller, intensively managed scale, it is not always possible to find an organic source for the seeds you are determined to grow. The National Organic Program, with help from accredited certifiers, is currently working out a list of those seeds determined to be commercially un-available.

With the already high-cost of organic crop production methods, the requirement to use more expensive and difficult to find organic seed sources can be a heavy burden on organic farmers. The intent of the Federal Organic Rule and the continued support of organic agriculture and organic seed production are invaluable.
