

PAUL STEVEN MILLER

Paul Steven Miller, Henry M. Jackson Professor of Law is Director of the University of Washington Disability Studies Program at the University of Washington School of Law. An internationally renowned expert in disability and employment discrimination law, Professor Miller joined the faculty of the University of Washington School of Law in 2004, after spending twelve years in public service in Washington, DC. He was one of the longest serving commissioners of the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), the federal agency which enforces employment discrimination laws. Since 2006, Professor Miller has been the director of the University of Washington's Disability Studies Program, an interdisciplinary program that examines the social, cultural, historical and personal experience of disability. Professor Miller is a frequent speaker and lecturer in the area of equal employment opportunity, workplace diversity, disability issues, and the legal, social and ethical issues of the Human Genome Project, and he is a prolific writer on these topics. He has been the convener and chair of several national and international symposia, including Framing Legal and Human Rights Strategies for Change: A Case Study of Disability Rights in Asia (2008); and The Ethics and Policy of Limiting Growth in Children with Severe Disabilities: Issues of Decision Making, Benefits and Social Impact (2007).
