Dear Dr. Henney

I am writing concerning the use of human antibiotics for healthy animals merely to hasten growth, which helps to make these drugs useless to treat human diseases. The Food and Drug Administration should ban this use immediately

The European Union has already done so and the WHO has called for this action. Why is the United States being laggard in this? It costs millions to create new drugs, why don't we keep the old ones useful for when they are needed for humans?

Sincerely
