Claim: Cable Project Damaged Shellfish

 http://www.ctnow.com/news/local/hc-apcrosssound0606.artjun06.story?coll=hc%2Dheadlines%2Dlocal

Associated Press

NEW HAVEN -- A shellfish company owner claims that 40 acres of oysters and clams were destroyed by an electric cable project in Long Island Sound. Ben Burgos of Ben's Seafood LLC, in his complaint to the Connecticut Siting Council, claims that the clam and oyster beds were blanketed with sand, silt and waste stirred up by the Cross Sound Cable Co. project last month.

Food plant facing $341,265 fine from EPA

The Detroit Free Press

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has proposed a $341,265 fine against a food processing plant that was the site of an explosion in January 2000. The EPA said that Norquick Distributing violated federal laws regulating reporting of a hazardous chemical release and two related emergency-preparedness laws.

SAN FRANCISCO

Global warming will bring hotter temperatures and depleted snowpacks to California over the next several decades, boosting demands on the state's already strained water supplies, according to a new study.

"With less precipitation falling as snow and more as rain, plus higher temperatures creating increased demand for water, the impacts on our water storage system will be enormous," said Lisa Sloan, an associate professor of Earth sciences at the University of California-Santa Cruz (UCSC) and an author of the new research.
