          When the war in Iraq ends, a renewed clamor for the United State s to back harsh restrictions on carbon-dioxide emissions will begin.

T he reasons are obvious. Environmentalists, politicians and editorialists in the U.S. will complain that, if only the Bush Administration had been more "multil ateral" and had backed the Kyoto Protocol on global warming, more Europeans wou ld have joined our military campaign against Saddam Hussein.

Tony Bla ir, our strongest overseas ally, has bitterly criticized U.S. opposition to Kyo to - partly to prove to home audiences that he is no lapdog of George W. Bush.
It's likely that he'll also want to patch things up with France and Germany by using some of his political capital with Bush to push the White House to adopt measures to fight climate change.

Key international meetings in Cancun and Florence this fall will be the battleground for the final assault by Green s and their allies to convince Americans to join Kyoto, or something like it.
br>
That's why a new study, funded in part by NASA and announced in a Harvard Uni versity press release on Monday, is so important. The study concludes that, con trary to popular belief, "Many records reveal that the 20th century is likely <
I>not</I> the warmest nor a uniquely extreme climatic period of the last millen nium" [emphasis in the study].
 The conclusion comes from "a review of more than 200 climate studies led by researchers at the Harvard-Smithsonian Ce nter for Astrophysics." The researchers were Willie Soon and Sallie Baliunas of the Harvard-Smithsonian Center; Craig Idso and Sherwood Idso of the Center for the Study of Carbon Dioxide and Global Change at Tempe, Ariz.; and David R. Le gates of the Center for Climatic Research at the University of Delaware.

br>Baliunas is also deputy director of the Mt. Wilson Observatory in California and co-host of TechCentralStation, to which Soon is a regular contributor.

In the press release distributed by Harvard, Soon is quoted as saying: "M any true research advances in reconstructing ancient climates have occurred ove r the past two decades, so we felt it was time to pull together a large sample of recent studies from the last five to ten years and look for patterns of vari ability and change.

"In fact, clear patterns did emerge showing that r egions worldwide experienced the highs of the Medieval Warm Period and lows of the Little Ice Age, and that 20th century temperatures are generally cooler tha n during the medieval warmth."

These findings are vital to the debate over the Kyoto agreement since the premise for cutting back on greenhouse-gas e missions is that humans played a significant role in heating up the Earth durin g the 20th Century. But Soon and his colleagues confirmed that a warm epoch app eared in various parts of the world from about 900 to 1000 A.D. through about 1 200 to 1300 A.D., during which temperatures were greater than those of the 20th Century.

Needless to say, there were no SUVs 1,000 years ago.

Other warm periods are also identified in the study. For example, the researc hers ask, "Was the warmth of the 1980s in western Europe exceptional or unusual ?" Not at all.

They cite the respected climate scholar H. H. Lamb, wh o wrote that "even the great warmth of the years 1989/1991, hailed in some quar ters as proof of the reality of the predicted global warming due to the enhance ment of the greenhouse effect by increasing carbon dioxide and other effluentsm ay have a surprising analogy in the past to the remarkable warmth - well attest ed in Europe - of the year 1540, shortly before the sharpest onset of the so-ca lled Little Ice Age." In the first week of January 1541, Lamb wrote that "young people were still bathing in the Rhine on the Swiss-German border."

he point here is that warm periods don't necessarily precede warmer periods. Th ey may precede colder ones. We just don't know enough about climate to make pre dictions, and it would be folly to spend between $150 billion and $400 billion a year - the estimates for Kyoto-style mitigation - on the flimsy evidence of w arming that currently exists.

The study also casts doubt on the sort o f thin anecdotal evidence often cited by the media to show that the planet is h eating up in unusual fashion. For example, the <I>New York Times</I> is obsesse d with retreating glaciers, but they are not a new phenomenon.

"Broad ly," write the scholars, "glaciers retreated all over the world during the Medi eval Warm Period, with a notable but minor re-advance between 1050 and 1150. Th e world's small glaciers and tropical glaciers have simultaneously retreated si nce the 19th century, but some glaciers have advanced." Soon and his colleagues cite the work of D. J. A. Evans, who "commented that significant warming phase s, especially those accompanied by relatively warm winters and cool summers, du ring interglacials [like the current period] may lead to the onset of another g lobal glaciation."

So, melting glaciers are not unique to the industr ial era, and they could signal a period of growing, not retreating, glaciers to come.

The evidence of earlier warming is not new. But, as Baliunas sa ys, "For a long time, researchers have possessed anecdotal evidence supporting the existence of these climate extremes. For example, the Vikings established c olonies in Greenland at the beginning of the second millennium that died out se veral hundred years later when the climate turned colder. And in England, viney ards had flourished during the medieval warmth. Now, we have an accumulation of objective data to back up these cultural indicators."

The data were from ice cores, tree-ring samples and other methods. And the results are clear: Despite our modern hubris, we aren't the only humans to experience a warmer ea rth. It makes sense, then, to view with skepticism the claims that we have <I>c aused</I> major changes in climate.

Observers such as Bjorn Lomborg, the Danish statistician and author of <I>The Skeptical Environmentalist,</I> st art their critique by accepting the notion that the earth is warming and that h umans play a key role. Lomborg argues that trying to fix the problem with huge expenditures or cutbacks that will reduce economic growth is far too costly for the meager benefits that will ensue from Kyoto's strictures.

Yes, bu t now Soon and the other researchers are showing the shakiness of Kyoto's found ation. The strong implication of their work is that warming is probably natural and cyclical. It happens all the time, and there is not much we can do about i
t. Nor can we predict its course with much accuracy.

What's needed now
 - and we certainly have the time - is more research. Risking havoc with the wo rld economy, especially in this fragile period, would be foolish and dangerous.
 Kyoto has been moved to the back burner, mainly by the U.S. and developing cou ntries. That's where it belongs.

But it might not stay there. Policyma kers need to pay attention to the facts - especially after the war ends and env ironmental extremists start applying the real heat.

            When the war in Iraq ends, a renewed clamor for the United State s to back harsh restrictions on carbon-dioxide emissions will begin.

T he reasons are obvious. Environmentalists, politicians and editorialists in the U.S. will complain that, if only the Bush Administration had been more "multil ateral" and had backed the Kyoto Protocol on global warming, more Europeans wou ld have joined our military campaign against Saddam Hussein.

Tony Bla
ir, our strongest overseas ally, has bitterly criticized U.S. opposition to Kyo to - partly to prove to home audiences that he is no lapdog of George W. Bush.
It's likely that he'll also want to patch things up with France and Germany by using some of his political capital with Bush to push the White House to adopt measures to fight climate change.

Key international meetings in Cancun
 and Florence this fall will be the battleground for the final assault by Green s and their allies to convince Americans to join Kyoto, or something like it.
br>
That's why a new study, funded in part by NASA and announced in a Harvard Uni versity press release on Monday, is so important. The study concludes that, con trary to popular belief, "Many records reveal that the 20th century is likely <
I>not</I> the warmest nor a uniquely extreme climatic period of the last millen nium" [emphasis in the study].
 The conclusion comes from "a review of more than 200 climate studies led by researchers at the Harvard-Smithsonian Ce nter for Astrophysics." The researchers were Willie Soon and Sallie Baliunas of the Harvard-Smithsonian Center; Craig Idso and Sherwood Idso of the Center for the Study of Carbon Dioxide and Global Change at Tempe, Ariz.; and David R. Le gates of the Center for Climatic Research at the University of Delaware.

br>Baliunas is also deputy director of the Mt. Wilson Observatory in California and co-host of TechCentralStation, to which Soon is a regular contributor.
<br
In the press release distributed by Harvard, Soon is quoted as saying: "M any true research advances in reconstructing ancient climates have occurred ove r the past two decades, so we felt it was time to pull together a large sample of recent studies from the last five to ten years and look for patterns of vari ability and change.

"In fact, clear patterns did emerge showing that r egions worldwide experienced the highs of the Medieval Warm Period and lows of the Little Ice Age, and that 20th century temperatures are generally cooler tha n during the medieval warmth."

These findings are vital to the debate over the Kyoto agreement since the premise for cutting back on greenhouse-gas e missions is that humans played a significant role in heating up the Earth durin

eared in various parts of the world from about 900 to 1000 A.D. through about 1 200 to 1300 A.D., during which temperatures were greater than those of the 20th Century.

Needless to say, there were no SUVs 1,000 years ago.

Other warm periods are also identified in the study. For example, the researchers ask, "Was the warmth of the 1980s in western Europe exceptional or unusual?" Not at all.

They cite the respected climate scholar H. H. Lamb, who wrote that "even the great warmth of the years 1989/1991, hailed in some quarters as proof of the reality of the predicted global warming due to the enhancement of the greenhouse effect by increasing carbon dioxide and other effluents may have a surprising analogy in the past to the remarkable warmth - well attested in Europe - of the year 1540, shortly before the sharpest onset of the so-called Little Ice Age." In the first week of January 1541, Lamb wrote that "young people were still bathing in the Rhine on the Swiss-German border."

The point here is that warm periods don't necessarily precede warmer periods. They may precede colder ones. We just don't know enough about climate to make predictions, and it would be folly to spend between $150 billion and $400 billion a year - the estimates for Kyoto-style mitigation - on the flimsy evidence of warming that currently exists.

The study also casts doubt on the sort of thin anecdotal evidence often cited by the media to show that the planet is heating up in unusual fashion. For example, the <I>New York Times</I> is obsessed with retreating glaciers, but they are not a new phenomenon.

"Broadly," write the scholars, "glaciers retreated all over the world during the Medieval Warm Period, with a notable but minor re-advance between 1050 and 1150. The world's small glaciers and tropical glaciers have simultaneously retreated since the 19th century, but some glaciers have advanced." Soon and his colleagues cite the work of D. J. A. Evans, who "commented that significant warming phases, especially those accompanied by relatively warm winters and cool summers, during interglacials [like the current period] may lead to the onset of another global glaciation."

So, melting glaciers are not unique to the industrial era, and they could signal a period of growing, not retreating, glaciers to come.

The evidence of earlier warming is not new. But, as Baliunas says, "For a long time, researchers have possessed anecdotal evidence supporting the existence of these climate extremes. For example, the Vikings established colonies in Greenland at the beginning of the second millennium that died out several hundred years later when the climate turned colder. And in England, vineyards had flourished during the medieval warmth. Now, we have an accumulation of objective data to back up these cultural indicators."

The data were from ice cores, tree-ring samples and other methods. And the results are clear: Despite our modern hubris, we aren't the only humans to experience a warmer earth. It makes sense, then, to view with skepticism the claims that we have <I>caused</I> major changes in climate.

Observers such as Bjorn Lomborg, the Danish statistician and author of <I>The Skeptical Environmentalist,</I> st art their critique by accepting the notion that the earth is warming and that h umans play a key role. Lomborg argues that trying to fix the problem with huge expenditures or cutbacks that will reduce economic growth is far too costly for the meager benefits that will ensue from Kyoto's strictures.

Yes, bu t now Soon and the other researchers are showing the shakiness of Kyoto's found ation. The strong implication of their work is that warming is probably natural and cyclical. It happens all the time, and there is not much we can do about i
t. Nor can we predict its course with much accuracy.

What's needed now
 - and we certainly have the time - is more research. Risking havoc with the wo rld economy, especially in this fragile period, would be foolish and dangerous.
 Kyoto has been moved to the back burner, mainly by the U.S. and developing cou ntries. That's where it belongs.

But it might not stay there. Policyma kers need to pay attention to the facts - especially after the war ends and env ironmental extremists start applying the real heat.
