

THIS ISSUE'S AUTHORS

GARY R. BIRCHLER, Ph.D., is clinical professor of psychiatry at the University of California at San Diego (UCSD) School of Medicine and adjunct professor at San Diego State University and the University of San Diego. He serves as co-director of the UCSD/Veterans Affairs (VA) Psychology Internship Program and director of the Family Mental Health Program, VA San Diego Healthcare System. Dr. Birchler is co-investigator on three Public Health Service research grants, studying the application of behavioral couples therapy to substance-abusing patients and their partners.

PAUL P. CASADONTE, M.D., is director of substance abuse treatment programs at the New York Harbor Health Care System VA Medical Center. He is clinical associate professor in the department of psychiatry at New York University School of Medicine. Dr. Casadonte conducts clinical research on heroin and cocaine abuse and on HIV infection and prevention among drug abusers.

WILLIAM FALS-STEWART, Ph.D., is a clinical psychologist and senior research scientist at the Research Institute on Addictions at the State University of New York, University at Buffalo. His research and treatment interests include marital and family therapy with alcohol and drug-abusing patients; substance abuse treatment cost, outcome, and benefit studies; and parent skills training for substance-using parents.

TERRY HORTON, M.D., is medical director and vice president of Phoenix House Foundation. A practicing internist, he is also clinical assistant professor of medicine at New York Medical College and has an appointment at the Weill College of Medicine, Cornell University. Dr. Horton's interests include community-based detoxification and the interface of substance abuse with primary health care.

VALERA JACKSON, M.S., is chief executive officer of the Village, a comprehensive social services agency in Miami, Florida. She has worked in the substance abuse field for more than 25 years. At the Village she has been instrumental in developing substance abuse and mental health services within a family systems model.

HENDRÉE E. JONES, Ph.D., is assistant professor of psychiatry at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore. She directs research at the Johns Hopkins Center for Addiction and Pregnancy, and is principal investigator for four NIDA-funded projects examining behavioral and pharmacological interventions for drug-dependent pregnant and recently postpartum women. She also directs the Cornerstone Program, a NIDA-funded project examining novel behavioral interventions to prevent relapse following residential opioid detoxification.

GEORGE F. KOLODNER, M.D., is cofounder and medical director of the Kolmac Clinic in Silver Spring, Maryland. The clinic provides outpatient detoxification, rehabilitation, and continued care for people with alcohol and other drug problems. Dr. Kolodner is also clinical associate professor of psychiatry at Georgetown University School of Medicine in Washington, D.C.

SUZANNE M. McMURPHY, M.S.S., Ph.D., is senior research associate at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine in Philadelphia, where she is co-investigator on several NIH-funded studies of barriers to health care. Previously she was director of research at Phoenix House. She teaches research and statistics at Bryn Mawr College in Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania.

TIMOTHY J. O'FARRELL, Ph.D., is professor of psychology at Harvard Medical School and director of the Families and Addiction Program of the VA Boston Healthcare System. For more than 20 years Dr. O'Farrell and Dr. William Fals-Stewart have been conducting research with the underlying hypothesis that recovery is rarely sought or accomplished by an individual alone. Among the approaches that have emerged is behavioral couples therapy.

& PANEL RESPONDENTS

MARTIN C. DOOT, M.D., is medical director of the Illinois Professionals Health Program, associate medical director of Advocate Medical Group, and chief of the division of addiction medicine at Advocate Lutheran General Hospital in Chicago. He is also assistant professor of family practice at the University of Illinois College of Medicine at Chicago.

CHRISTINE E. GRELLA, Ph.D., is a research psychologist in the Integrated Substance Abuse Programs at the Neuropsychiatric Institute of the University of California at Los Angeles. Her research focuses on treatment processes and outcomes in mental health and substance abuse, using both experimental and naturalistic study designs, with an emphasis on special populations.

ERIC E. McCOLLUM, Ph.D., is professor and clinical director of Virginia Tech's Marriage and Family Therapy Program in Falls Church, Virginia. He has conducted research to develop and test a couples treatment model for female substance abusers and couples therapy in domestic violence treatment. With Dr. Terry Trepper, he is author of the book Family Solutions for Substance Abuse, published by Haworth Press.

MARGARET McMAHON, LICSW, has counseled patients and families in the substance abuse and mental health fields for 25 years. She is currently employed in an outpatient drug abuse treatment program and has a private practice in Washington, D.C.

J. THOMAS PAYTE, M.D., is corporate medical director of Colonial Management Group in Orlando, Florida. He has 40 years of experience providing opioid agonist therapy, and was an investigator in a NIDA-sponsored clinical trial of buprenorphine.

CAROL SHAPIRO, M.S.W., founder and president of Family Justice, Inc., has been working to bring about criminal justice reform for more than 30 years, helping to develop alternatives to custody, victim/offender services, and substance abuse policy. She is former program director of La Bodega de la Familia, Family Justice's direct service arm, on Manhattan's Lower East Side.

DACE SVIKIS, Ph.D., is associate professor of psychology at Virginia Commonwealth University (VCU) in Richmond. She is also director of VCU's Promoting Healthy Pregnancies program and deputy director of its Institute for Women's Health. Dr. Svikis's current research focuses on treatment engagement and on motivational and behavioral brief interventions for women with alcohol and other drug problems.

ARTHUR W. VAN ZEE, M.D., is an internist with a hospital-based practice at the St. Charles Clinic in St. Charles City, Virginia. His intense engagement in providing substance abuse treatment began in 1999, when OxyContin abuse became epidemic in Appalachia.

MARLENE F. WATSON, Ph.D., is director of programs in couple and family therapy at Drexel University in Philadelphia. She is also chair of the Commission on Accreditation for Marriage and Family Therapy Education.