

On 8 June in our local newspaper there was a column headed "FTC plans to devalue product labels that say made in the U.S.A." From what I read I truly hope that this is incorrect. I am someone who does look for that label and would like to think it means 100% made in U.S.A.

The column stated products that are substantially transformed in U.S. (etc.) will be able to use that label. Transform can mean to change in form or appearance - wouldn't this mean that an item could be 100% made elsewhere and then packaged in U.S.A. and still qualify for the label - since it has been transformed in appearance ??

Made in other countries of U.S.A. components or made in U.S.A of other countries components do not rank high @ all with me. I want the made in the USA label on items I purchase and I don't want it watered down.

Again, I do hope that what I read was incorrect.

Sincerely

Mrs. A. Eppenbach
