

OCTOBER 2008

A NEW DIRECTION FOR AMERICA

America faces daunting challenges—and clear choices. The worst financial crisis since the Great Depression imperils our nation's vitality and the economic security of every American. America's brave men and women are still fighting a costly war in Iraq while focus needs to be intensified on Afghanistan and terrorism around the globe. The call for change could not be more clear.

The 110th Congress has begun to move America in a New Direction. Toward energy independence and clean, renewable energy and an energy efficient future. To an America more competitive in a global economy, creating high tech and green jobs here at home. Putting our troops and veterans first. Working to make college, energy, health care, and home ownership more affordable for every American. Beginning to change the way we do business in Washington and restore fiscal responsibility and accountability to government.

The New Direction Congress has enacted into law key legislation to rebuild our economy, strengthen our national security, care for America's children and families, protect our planet, and restore accountability—with significant bipartisan support more than 70 percent of the time. More progress was prevented by the failed ideology and the continued obstruction of the Bush Administration and his allies in Congress. A New Direction for America is still needed.
