-->After Chosing "threat to Native Peoples' sacred sites" as a paper topic for my college class, I was shocked to find this case. This is the 21st century, is it not? Still, the government acts as though it's not STOLEN land they conduct their harmful research on.

I think the best action for the world is to put funding toward recycling nuclear fuel into reusable fuel, and then finding a more suitable repository for the waste. Why not just put it in the middle of the Vatican? If you're going to propose endangerment of one religion's sacred space, why not euqally endanger another. Fair is fair.

I can only pray that the government makes the RIGHT choice here- not to use Yucca mountain or any other Native lands for repository of nuclear waste.
