

January 21, 2005

Federal Trade Commission/Office of the Secretary
Room H-159 (Annex K)
600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20580
"Prerecorded Message EBR, Telemarketing Project #R411001"

To the Commission:

Subject: Do Not Call Regulations

I do not think anyone understands the amount/volume of unwarranted calls that arrive at my home. I do not know these people, have no interest in listening to them and find most of them offensive.

I signed up on the do not call list because of the volume of calls received and it has decreased the volume. Now some one wants to water down the rules to return to an unwarranted intrusion on my home. The description I have for this is "A Rape of My Right to Privacy". If I want their product, I can find them in a store or on the Internet and need no help from them (Telemarketers).

It is a very naive position to take and to assume the leopard will remove his spots and that they will limit or not abuse what they are asking for.

If anything should happen in this issue, the rules in this regard should be strengthened, not weakened.

If people sign up on a list to limit access to their homes by this evasive method of harassment, then the government should honor their wishes.

Thank you for listening and I hope your response is in favor of the taxpaying public.

David Hansen

David Hansen