I. Funding Opportunity Description

Purpose of Program: This program promotes academic achievement and improves results for children with disabilities by supporting technical assistance, model demonstration projects, dissemination of useful information, and implementation activities that are supported by scientifically based research.

Priority: In accordance with 34 CFR 75.105(b)(2)(v), this priority is from allowable activities specified in the statute (see sections 663 and 681(d) of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA)).

Absolute Priority: For FY 2006 this priority is an absolute priority. Under 34 CFR 75.105(c)(3), we consider only applications that meet this priority.

This priority is: Model Demonstration Centers on Implementing Tertiary Level Behavioral Interventions within a School-Wide Model for Children who are Not Responsive to Universal and Secondary Level Interventions.

Background

During the last several years, increased attention and an emerging research base have focused on a response to intervention model that identifies and addresses the needs of children who do not respond sufficiently to high quality class-wide academic instruction and remedial evidence-based interventions. This response to intervention model, while gaining attention with respect to students experiencing academic challenges, is also applicable to students experiencing behavioral challenges. Despite high quality class-wide behavioral strategies and remedial interventions, some children with behavioral challenges fail to make sufficient progress and require more individualized and intensive supports to be successful in their educational program.

The school setting is one of the most important settings for behavioral prevention and intervention programs and has been described as the ideal setting for these programs due to compulsory attendance and sustained contact with youth during the early years of development (Loeber & Farrington, 1998, Walker and Shinn, 2002). School-wide behavioral programs have received increased attention since the 1997 amendments to IDEA introduced the concept of “positive behavioral interventions and supports.” The three-tiered prevention model, originally adapted from mental health literature, has emerged as the prevailing model for school-wide implementation of behavioral prevention and intervention programs. Components of the model include: (1) Universal interventions for all students; (2) secondary interventions for smaller groups of students who may require some additional remedial interventions in order to be successful in their educational program; and (3) tertiary level interventions for those students who, despite a high quality universal program and subsequent evidence-based secondary interventions, fail to make substantial progress without the implementation of individualized, intensive interventions. Assessment of progress throughout the multi-level tiers of support is based on a student's response to interventions.

Currently, approximately one percent of all children who receive services under IDEA are children with emotional disturbances (ED). Students with ED are identified later than students with other disabilities, with the earliest identifications generally occurring at age nine (National Longitudinal Transition Study of Youth II). With evidence documenting the reduced effects of interventions that are implemented after antisocial and aggressive behaviors have persisted, early intervention is critical to mitigate and possibly reverse these negative behavioral trajectories (Webster-Stratton & Hammond, 1997 and Campbell, 1995). Young children who demonstrate significant, intractable, behavioral challenges and who do not respond sufficiently to universal or secondary interventions will need comprehensive tertiary level interventions to prevent extremely bleak outcomes both for the individual and society as a whole (Sprague, et al., 2001).

In the 1987 National Longitudinal Transition Study of Youth, students with ED had the poorest outcomes of all students with disabilities. Unfortunately, these outcomes persisted in a follow-up study conducted ten years later (SRI, 2004). Negative outcomes included: Poor grades, dropping out, arrest, teenage pregnancy, and unemployment. Students with ED, in spite of their average to above average intelligence, are significantly more likely than students without ED to experience academic problems. These academic problems may become more significant for children who do not respond to universal efforts and secondary interventions and, due to their behavior problems, these children are frequently removed from instructional environments. For these students with intractable behavioral challenges, tertiary level interventions are critical to enable them to participate in the educational system.

Tertiary interventions are designed to focus on the needs of individuals who exhibit patterns of significant problem behavior that is dangerous or highly disruptive, impedes learning, or results in social or educational exclusion. Tertiary interventions are most effective when they are nested within a multi-tiered school-wide model. The goal of tertiary interventions is to diminish problem behavior and to increase the student's adaptive skills, access to instruction, and opportunities for an enhanced quality of life. Due to the complexity and intensity of behaviors targeted for intervention at this level and based on the individualized nature of the interventions implemented, a functional behavior assessment (FBA) is a necessary tool to assist educators in determining the most appropriate interventions designed to meet the student's specific needs.

An FBA is an evidence-based method of assessment that uses direct observation to develop hypothesis statements for behavior support plans and uses a comprehensive approach to identify antecedents and consequences that will help control problem behavior and to develop appropriate interventions (Horner, 1994). It provides data regarding the student's behavior and potential intervention strategies and assists educators in focusing on modifications that can be made to the environment to effect change in the student (Crone, Horner, & Hawken, 2004). Behavioral interventions based on FBAs are also three times more likely than those not based on FBAs to be effective in reducing problem behaviors and encouraging more appropriate behaviors (Carr, Turnbull, et al., 2001). Implementation of interventions that are effective in reducing problem behaviors likely will increase the student's exposure to instructional environments and result in improved achievement and more positive life outcomes.

Priority

The purpose of this priority is to support three (3) centers, each of which is to develop a behavioral model that incorporates scientific evidence-based, tertiary level interventions within a school-wide behavior model for students in elementary and middle school, in regular and special education classrooms. Each Center's model must apply and test research findings in typical settings where children with disabilities receive services to determine the services' usefulness, effectiveness, and general applicability to these typical settings. To meet this priority, a Center must design and implement a model that: (1) Targets the group of children who have not been responsive to universal behavioral strategies or secondary evidence-based interventions that have been shown to be effective based on scientific research and who require intensive and individualized behavioral interventions at the tertiary level; (2) is based on evidence-based practices, strategies, and interventions; (3) includes a process for the collection, analysis, and use of data for decision making; and (4) includes a professional development strategy. A Center's model must have the same critical components across different school levels but these components may be implemented slightly differently based on the age of the students.

Each Center must establish its model in at least three sites. A site must consist of, at a minimum, one elementary school and one middle school, and may include a pre-school or high school setting.

In order to be considered for funding under this priority, an IHE must demonstrate that the key staff responsible for implementing the model have expertise in the full continuum of school-wide behavioral interventions—universal, secondary, and tertiary—which may be demonstrated by having refereed publications on this topic or federally supported grants addressing this area. Key staff must also have demonstrated success implementing behavioral interventions and models in typical settings. In addition, the IHE must establish a partnership with a local educational agency (LEA) to facilitate the implementation of the model in school settings and increase the likelihood that school personnel will develop sufficient expertise in order to sustain the model after project completion.

Each Center must coordinate with the Model Demonstration Coordination Center (MDCC), a separate center funded by the Department's Office of Special Education Programs (OSEP) that is responsible for coordinating implementation and analyzing data to determine the effectiveness of the tertiary level intervention models. In 2005, OSEP awarded funds, through a contract, for the establishment of the MDCC. The MDCC is developing a data coordination plan and cross site data collection instruments, and will generate common evaluation questions, synthesize and analyze data collection, monitor fidelity of implementation, ensure reliability of data, and foster dissemination of information.

The start date for the projects funded under this competition is expected to be January 1, 2007. A meeting of all Centers funded under this priority as well as the MDCC will be held one month after the awards are made. The purpose of this meeting is to review and, as necessary, modify proposals and discuss collaboration among the Centers and the MDCC.

An applicant must describe, in its application—

(a) The sites where the model will be implemented and the methods used to recruit and select sites, including documentation of the implementation and fidelity of evidence-based universal and secondary practices and interventions and a reliable, effective process for determining which students have not responded to universal and secondary interventions and therefore require tertiary level interventions;

(b) The proposed model and the supporting evidence for the model as a whole or for the critical components that are included within the model; and

(c) The knowledge, experience, and capabilities of the key staff who will be responsible for the implementation of tertiary level interventions and the model.

To meet the requirements of this priority, each Center, at a minimum, must—

(1) Implement a model and a data collection plan that includes: a selection or screening procedure for children who are not responsive to universal or secondary level interventions, a method for linking interventions to problem behaviors, a detailed description of critical elements of the model, a process for collecting, evaluating and formulating decisions based on individual student and systems (i.e., class, school, district) data, and a description of the system variables required to implement and sustain the model;

(2) Provide and document initial and continuing professional development to administrators, regular educators, and special educators on the use of tertiary level interventions nested within a school-wide behavior model;

(3) Collect data related to the fidelity of the implementation of the model and describe the methods of fidelity evaluation, as well as how these methods relate to continuing professional development and feedback provided to teachers and administrators;

(4) Identify methods for effectively increasing communication and collaboration among parents, community agencies, and school/Center staff;

(5) Collaborate with the other Centers funded under this competition and the MDCC in order to determine a plan for evaluating the impact of these models on children's behavior and academic progress and outcomes;

(6) Develop regular communication with OSEP's National Center on Positive Behavioral Supports and OSEP's other funded centers, as appropriate, to share information regarding topics such as successful strategies and less successful approaches for implementing behavioral interventions in schools;

(7) Develop strategies for the dissemination of implementation information, if the model proves to be successful, to specific audiences, including teachers, families, administrators, policymakers, and researchers. These dissemination strategies must involve collaboration with other technical assistance providers including parent centers funded by OSEP, organizations, and researchers;

(8) Prior to developing any new product, whether paper or electronic, submit for approval a proposal describing the content and purpose of the product to the Project Officer to be designated by OSEP and the document review board of OSEP's Dissemination Center;

(9) Budget for the Center's project director to attend a three-day Project Directors' meeting in Washington, DC during each year of the project; and

(10) If a Web site is maintained, format the information and documents on the Web site in a manner that meets a government or industry-recognized standard for accessibility.

Waiver of Proposed Rulemaking: Under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) (5 U.S.C. 553), the Department generally offers interested parties the opportunity to comment on a proposed priority. However, section 681(d) of IDEA makes the public comment requirements under the APA inapplicable to the priority in this notice.
