From Peace Corps to Commissioned Corps: Careers for RPCVs in the U.S. Public Health Service By: Nathan Epling

Returning from the fullness of international development through Peace Corps service often leaves returned volunteers disappointed by the empty career choices they encounter upon their return home. Many RPCVs wish to continue making a real difference in people’s lives during everyday challenges and in times of disaster. If you can identify with these RPCVs, you may want to explore job opportunities with the United States Public Health Service.

The Commissioned Corps of the U.S. Public Health Service (PHS) is comprised of highly trained, mobile, health professionals, whose mission is to protect, promote, and advance the health and safety of our nation under the direction of the Surgeon General and the Secretary of Health and Human Services. It is a Uniformed Service of the United States, with military rank and privileges, broken into eleven career categories: dentist, dietitian, engineer, environmental health, health services, nurse, pharmacist, physician, scientist, therapist, and veterinarian. The basic requirement is a BS from an accredited school relating to one of these professions, which serves as part of your professional training as an officer in the Commissioned Corps.

While applying to receive your commission as a PHS officer, you will network with recruiting professionals and search listings to find a position within an agency or program that employs Commissioned Officers (The information bar to the right describes the possibilities). Once you are commissioned as an officer in the Public Health Service and have accepted a position with an agency, your career of maintaining the health and safety of peoples in need begins.

Historically, PHS Commissioned Corps officers worked to control the spread of contagious diseases such as smallpox and yellow fever, provided healthcare to underserved groups, conducted important biomedical research, regulated the food and drug supply, provided health care to underserved groups, supplied medical assistance and disease control in the aftermath of disasters, and served in numerous other ways. More recently, officers of the PHS have responded to various forms of disaster and conflict, including the 9/11 attacks, the tsunami in Southeast Asia, and hurricanes Katrina and Rita. Today, officers are required to become “deployment-ready” and provide their unique abilities to those who need it most.

Typically, PHS officers enjoy ancillary benefits beyond those of the regular civil service, including:

- Department of Defense (DoD) benefits, such as Space-A travel, use of military commissaries, exchanges, and officers clubs;
- Opportunities for school loan repayment, further education, and career advancement;

Crisis Corps Recruiting Short-Term Volunteers

El Salvador

In the fall of 2005, the volcano Ilimatepec (Santa Ana) erupted, destroying 800 hectares of natural habitat and damaging 2,000 hectares of coffee plantations—a very important source of income in the region. The volcano is part of the new National Park Los Volcanes, which has been managed by SalvaNATURA since 2003. Los Volcanes is one of the four most important natural areas in El Salvador. The eruption caused the evacuation of 6,500 people and has interrupted, and in many cases destroyed, the livelihoods of local populations and the infrastructure used to support the economy and the budding tourism industry. Through this project, SalvaNATURA hopes to reconstruct much of the infrastructure. SalvaNATURA requests one Crisis Corps Volunteer to serve as an Economist and Business Administration Specialist for a six month project to start ASAP. Duties: develops budgets for the project plan; creates a Fundraising Action Plan; develops proposals and requests for national and international donations for funding; works in coordination with SalvaNATURA's technical staff to support the formulation of a Fundraising Action Plan; researches funding possibilities; develops and submits proposals to potential donors. Qualifications: degree in economy or business administration; experience in proposal writing and fundraising; proficient in Spanish. Desired Qualifications: experience in the design of inversion and pre-inversion plans for eco-tourism projects.

Fundación para el Desarrollo (FUNDESA) requests one Crisis Corps volunteer to serve as a Disaster Preparedness Specialist. This is a six month position and will start ASAP. Duties: improves FUNDESA's emergency and disaster attention module and methods for the most vulnerable zones; increases the capacity of local coordinators in creating alternative solutions to problems facing the community; helps organize communities in emergency committees; advises communities on how to make plans for disaster preparedness and response and related objectives; helps develop strategic training plans and disaster preparedness tools for communities; implements monitoring, evaluation, and control strategies to improve the sustainability of the disaster prevention project; strengthens project management capacities in the institution and communities.
