Peace Corps Response

Find your Career in Development Here at Home

By Katie Yaeger (PCV, Nicaragua, 2002-2004; CCV, Katrina, 2005)

This article is reprinted with edits from the August 15, 2007, issue of Hotline.

Having spent 27 months—or more—living, working, and traveling abroad through your Peace Corps service, you probably returned home with a giant question mark over your head and heart. You wonder, are you ready to be back in the sumptuous USA, with big cars, supercenter stores, and more everyday choices than you ever remembered possible?

Admittedly, for many RPCVs it is a painful process of readjustment back home. Although the hot showers and familiar foods temporarily may ameliorate your disorientation and make you feel like you are living in the lap of luxury, this feeling soon gives way to a deeper feeling: discontent. RPCVs are not a pococurante bunch and often desire to continue making a difference in people's lives. Many RPCVs have a deeply-rooted desire to work in development-oriented careers. Therefore, they begin the arduous task of job hunting in international development, where they end up feeling as though they are one of thousands of people with similar backgrounds...and for good reason. If you take a look at any international development agency, organization, or foundation, you will find other RPCVs who had the same idea, and there are over 3000 RPCVs returning to the U.S. annually - not to mention the thousands of graduates from internationally-focused university programs. So, when seeking work in the saturated market of international development, what other choices are there?

Many RPCVs do not consider the possibility of domestic development work, thereby overlooking the fact that so many aspects of our own society need great improvement. Public health, education, urban and rural development, and agriculture are among many career choices where RPCVs can put to great use their acquired skills and desire to make a difference. Domestic development work benefits from people with the outsider and insider perspective that an RPCV has. Peace Corps Volunteers often learn to understand how complex and difficult development work can be for communities in transition and, as a result, return with a determination and a set of skills that can work in various environments presented to them. Creativity, grant-writing, building relationships with funders, project development, and working with national, state, and local government are just some of the skills that RPCVs bring home, refined and ready for successful use.

Like many other RPCVs, I moved to Washington, DC, in search of that perfect Peace Corps-like job in international development. And, like many other RPCVs, I searched ardently and with an unrequited zeal for quite some time. To my surprise, the opportunity that came to me broadened my horizons in a way that I hadn't previously considered: working with domestic sustainable food systems at the Wallace Center at Winrock International. In no time at all, I came to realize the importance of sustainable food systems, and how they affect every person regardless of income level, race, age, region, or passion for the subject. Interconnected with the areas of environment, land usage, health care, human rights, anti-poverty and

Eastern Caribbean

The Health, Hope and HIV Network (HHH Network) of Antigua & Barbuda has requested a Peace Corps Response Volunteer (PCRV) to work as a Capacity Building Volunteer for a six month assignment. HHH Network is a nonprofit and non-governmental organization that was formed to address the plight of people living with HIV and AIDS (PLWHA) and supports those who are infected and affected. The PCRV will assist in building the capacity of the HHH Network office to more effectively support PLWHA in Antigua and Barbuda. Duties: assist staff in identifying and writing project proposals which would ensure continuous funding for the HHH Network; train members of the HHH Network in proposal writing; train members of the HHH Network in basic computer literacy; advise the HHH Network staff on efficient office administration practices; teach basic Spanish to the staff. Qualifications: BA in social sciences, community development, or related field; experience in NGO development, capacity building, proposal writing, resource development, and training; strong program management skills; minimum two years HIV/AIDS experience, preferably in working with PLWHA; proficient in MS Office applications; high level Spanish skills and ability to teach basic Spanish.

The Nevis Ministry of Education in the Federation of St. Christopher (St. Kitts) and Nevis has requested a Peace Corps Response Volunteer (PCRV) for a six-month assignment to work as an IT Program Development Advisor. On the island of Nevis, a mere 20% of primary and secondary students are considered computer literate and only 10% of secondary school graduates sit for the IT subject final examination. Although the Nevis Island Administration considers human resource development a priority and recognizes that technology is integral to achieving this objective, past attempts to integrate technology by the Nevis Ministry of Education have been sporadic and have yielded little impact on instructional strategies. Acting in the capacity of advisor, the PCRV will be expected to prepare and present a strategy document to the Ministry of Education outlining proposed recommendations and a suggested implementation plan for upgrading present school-based computer resources and implementing a state of the art computer program. Duties: Review the mandate and resources of the local government, interview relevant stakeholders and prepare a work plan; Assess the computer and human resources of the Nevis Ministry of Education; Review primary and secondary school curriculum and advise on educational software relevant to the local system, including cost projections; Meet with, and educate Education Officers, principals, and teachers to ensure support for the implementation and sustainability of the project. Qualifications: (Mandatory) Experience working in the education sector on IT capacity-building issues; Experience as an administrator, classroom teacher or trainer with curriculum development and/or implementation; Experience utilizing multimedia for instruction and student presentation of assignments; Experience conducting needs assessments; Ability to write and present a coherent report (in English) with recommendations; Technical skills required to guide local personnel on computer lab design and functionality; Experience meeting and planning with trainers or teachers. (Desired) Experience in the Caribbean or working in a multi-ethnic school system.

The Nevis Disaster Management Department (NDMD) has requested a PCRV to provide technical advice to the five (5) districts in the development and execution of a community-based disaster preparedness and mitigation program. Duties: Develop a risk assessment survey and implement within the communities; Review and identify risk information and approaches to strengthen disaster management at the community level; Develop a social marketing and training plan to promote community preparedness within all 5 communities and 4 schools; Review NDMD training plans and develop complementary materials and/or community training modules to be delivered by community leaders; Make recommendations for the sustainability of the disaster committees. Mandatory Qualifications: Bachelor's degree in Public Administration, Public Management, or relevant discipline, with a focus on Disaster or Emergency Preparedness; Training and facilitation experience; Significant experience in community development activities; Experience designing and conducting vulnerability assessments; Research skills; Ability to work independently; Adaptability, flexibility, patience, optimistic attitude. Desired Qualifications: Advanced degree and/or training in Disaster/Emergency Management; Practical experience in disaster response applicable to hazards in Nevis.

El Salvador

Save the Children US is requesting two Peace Corps Response Volunteers to provide support for an emergency preparedness project in the municipality of Izalco in El Salvador for a Disaster Preparedness and Mitigation (DPM) program. The PCR Volunteers will support and strengthen existing emergency response teams in nine communities and train the remaining two communities in disaster preparedness activities to include formulating emergency plans, updating risk mapping procedures and risk maps, and conducting emergency preparedness drills. The Volunteers will also be responsible for coordinating all disaster preparedness activities with local government entities and other relevant organizations. Qualifications: Degree in social sciences; experience with disaster preparedness activities; knowledge of emergency management procedures; strong Spanish language skills; experience with non-formal training and sustainable local development; ability to work independently with problem solving skills, professionalism, and leadership.

Guyana

The Health Sector Development Unit (HSDU) and Guyana Geology and Mines Commission (GGMC) is requesting a Peace Corps Response Volunteer to assist with the Guyana HIV/AIDS Prevention and Control Project. The Technical Officer will work to promote HIV/AIDS awareness within the mining sector through *outreach activities, * the training of Field Counselors and selected members of the community and through the *promotion of alternative sustainable income programs to augment mining activities. Qualifications: degree in health education, counseling, or other social science related degrees, at least two years experience with HIV/AIDS education, solid communication skills, Training of Trainers and capacity building experience, substantial experience in curriculum/materials development, and experience with data collection using Excel.

Jamaica

The Jamaica Red Cross, Manchester Chapter seeks a Peace Corps Response Volunteer for six months to serve as an Emergency Medical Technical Trainer. The Volunteer will provide basic-level Emergency Medical Technician (EMT-B) training to designated staff and volunteers (about 20-30 students); develop a path to EMT certification for students by researching, documenting and facilitating follow-up testing by recognized certification organizations; and research Continuing Education requirements necessary for students to maintain certification. Mandatory Qualifications: Emergency Medical Technician (EMT) certification at a minimum level of Basic (EMT-B); experience creating training programs and designing workshops (2+ years); experience delivering medical training programs; and technical writing skills specific to process documentation. Desired Qualifications: Advanced EMT certification (or comparable medical license); training and certification as an EMS instructor and/or; First Aid Instructor; experience collaborating with educational organizations in a cross-cultural setting; and Returned Peace Corps Volunteer/Jamaica.

Peace Corps Response

Liberia

The Ministry of Health and Social Welfare (MHSW) supports the World Health Organization recommendation of skilled attendance at every birth. Unfortunately, Liberia has lost hundreds of practicing physicians over the last three decades and are in the process of rebuilding the health sector. Frontline services now rest with the mid-level health professionals. The MHSW has prioritized the training of midwives in meeting the need for skilled attendance at each birth. Two Peace Corps Response Volunteers are being requested to work as Midwife Program Instructors. Duties and Responsibilities include: Academic and clinical teaching in one or more midwifery schools; assisting with curriculum review, design, and revision for pre-service and in-service training; assist with preparing standard lesson plans and other teaching material; assist with providing appropriate clinical environment for midwifery training; identify needs and assist in planning workshops and seminars for midwives and midwifery students to update their knowledge; and more. Qualifications: Mandatory Qualifications: Registered nurse, physician, physician's assistant, nurse practitioner, or other related field; experienced in team-oriented approaches to ensure a well-operated institution; good communication and personal skills;

strong organizational and planning skills; experience with effective staff support, mentoring and feedback; ability to work in a challenging environment. Desired Qualifications: Nurse Practitioner or Midwife; B.S. in Nursing; Post-graduate studies; specialty training in obstetrics and gynecology; experience in teaching; able to actively promote the use of participatory methods in teaching; experience in inclusive, open leadership and team-oriented approaches to ensure a well-functioning institution; experience working in sub-Saharan Africa; understanding of a post-conflict environment; creativity in working in an environment with limited resources.

The Liberian Ministry of Education's Rural Teacher Training Institutes (RTTIs) in Kakata, Zorzor, and Webbo have requested the assistance of three (3) Peace Corps Response Volunteers (PCRVs) who have the ability to work in a challenging environment. The project goal is to provide leadership mentoring to these RTTIs and build the capacity of administrators and staff to develop transparent and open systems of communication and administration. They are requesting a PCRV at each of these locations to work as a Mentor to the Academic Dean of the RTTI. Each PCRV will mentor the Academic Dean in key areas including: open, transparent leadership; participatory decision-making; promoting an inclusive strategic planning process; effective coordination across RTTIs. Mandatory Qualifications: Minimum Bachelors in Education, preferably Masters in Education; sound education experience in teacher training at the primary level with an understanding of the needs of the rural classroom; able to actively promote the use of active learning and participatory methods of education; experienced in team-oriented approaches; good communication and personal skills; strong organizational and planning skills; experience with effective staff support, mentoring, and feedback. Desired Qualifications: Experience in leadership positions in individual schools or school districts; experience working in sub-Saharan Africa; understanding of a post-conflict environment; and more.

hunger, urban sprawl, rural development, politics, industry, nonprofits, foundations, immigration, and people of all ages, the multi-farious topic of food systems is truly one that we often don't reflect too deeply upon, but that affects everyone: we all need to eat! Fortunately, there is a growing trend for our society to begin to consider the importance of sustainable food systems, and fading is the day when one had to seek out organic foods, locally grown produce, and fair trade products. Indeed, there is a growing movement with strong undercurrents promoting continued growth. In fact, in some places such as some large metropolises, purchasing your food at a local farmer's market and lauding restaurants that source raw food locally is all the rage! I smile when I think about this and how my work is worthwhile, although I know we still have a long way to go and, as a result, a lot of work left to do.

At the Wallace Center, I have had the opportunity to see how one issue in domestic development work is multifaceted and breaks down into a multitude of discrete opportunities for all types of work. Whether it's farmer's market development and promotion, understanding politics behind the Farm Bill, linking nonprofits with industries, leveraging relationships with various funding organizations and agencies who are committed to sustainable food systems, or researching the effects of immigration on farming and foods, I have come to see how diverse and interesting this field can be. Additionally, as the world becomes even more interconnected through various types of globalization, I realize that the work that I do affects people on all levels and—ultimately—all over the world. And, if I decide to cross back over to international development work, it doesn't look too shabby on my resume that I have worked on a domestic initiative that so strongly correlates with a huge international issue. As a result, it builds the resume with well-rounded experience.

So now you're ready to think about ways to help your local and national community... but where to begin? Remembering that networking means just about everything when looking for a job, start putting out your feelers and let people know what you want. Contact local government officials, who will have a pretty good idea of who is working in the community. The other usual places—such as the library, search engines, community bulletin boards like Craigslist, websites of local community-focused enterprises and organizations, and general meeting grounds of the community—will reveal new stones to turn over. Set up informational interviews in as many places as you can find and ask anything you would like to know about the organization. This not only allows you the opportunity to meet people, but to also get a greater grasp on what kind of work is being done, and where your efforts are needed most. Having already proven your commitment to service, you may find that once you start talking with

Peace Corps' Office of Domestic Programs, Returned Volunteer Services Introduces SIGI³

What is SIGI³?

SIGI³ is a highly interactive career assessment tool that is designed to help you make informed and rational decisions about your field of study and career. SIGI³ can help you assess your work-related values, interests, and skills. SIGI³ will help you examine key motivators and match work-related values, interests, and skills to educational and career pathways. First you will enter your work-related preferences, and then SIGI³ will search its built-in library and find those careers that most closely match your preferences. SIGI³'s library is so large that it may well find career options that you never even considered or knew existed!

How do I register for access to SIGI³?

To access SIGI³, e-mail RVS at rvsinfo@peacecorps.gov with your full name, country and dates of Peace Corps service.

SIGI 3 is licensed to the United States Peace Corps. Use of this license by individuals not officially and directly authorized by Peace Corps' Office of Domestic Programs/Returned Volunteer Services is prohibited**
