Crisis Corps

Special Issue: Serving with Crisis Corps

Over the past 10 years the Crisis Corps program has grown and evolved in response to world events and the changing needs of Peace Corps posts and their partners. The first Crisis Corps Volunteers served in Central Asia and the Caribbean. Since then, more than 1000 Crisis Corps Volunteers (CCVs) have served in over 40 countries.

In the first three years, both Paraguay and Guinea had large Crisis Corps programs. In Paraguay, volunteer work focused on humanitarian relief as a result of major flooding. At the same time, the Crisis Corps sent teams of volunteers to the forest region of Guinea-Conakry to help major NGOs deal with a massive influx of refugees from wars in neighboring Liberia and Sierra Leone. Ten years later, the Guinea program still ranks as the 3rd largest in Crisis Corps history.

The second largest occurred in 1999 as Hurricane Mitch battered Honduras, Guatemala, and Nicaragua. At the invitation of the Peace Corps posts in each of the countries, the Crisis Corps geared up for a major initiative that would last for three years and include more than 150 volunteers serving in a variety of capacities all focused on the reconstruction effort. One extraordinary assignment included a volunteer who served as a heavy construction machinery operator. He, along with a crew of Host Country Nationals, moved along the Honduran coastline repairing roads, washed out sections of the coastline, and helping locals remove dangerous debris from the storm.

From 2001 through 2004, the Crisis Corps focused largely on the HIV/AIDS epidemic with nearly 80% of volunteer assignments working in the sector. The largest programs include Malawi, Zambia, Kenya, and Namibia.

In a two year project that began in 2005, the Crisis Corps played the lead role in Peace Corps' response to the tsunami that struck South East Asia, sending over 70 volunteers to Thailand and Sri Lanka to support post-tsunami rebuilding efforts.

In September of 2005, Peace Corps secured a mission assignment from the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to provide Crisis Corps Volunteers to support the emergency relief efforts in the Gulf Coast region. 272 Volunteers were deployed to help survivors in Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas. This historic endeavor marked the first time Peace Corps has deployed in the United States.

Crisis Corps Volunteers work in five main program areas including:

- Humanitarian Response
- HIV/AIDS (including PEPFAR/Emergency Plan Programming)
- Disaster Preparedness and Mitigation
- Natural Disaster Relief and Reconstruction
- Post Conflict Relief and Reconstruction

As Crisis Corps looks forward to the coming year, we will be searching for many more qualified candidates to return to service. To apply for the Crisis Corps, see our online application at www.peacecorps.gov/crisiscorps.

How Crisis Corps Can Help Me Refocus My Career

The average age of a Crisis Corps Volunteer is 38, which means that a majority bring years of professional experience to their assignments. Some of the mid-career professionals who become CCVs take advantage of employee leave programs while others enter or return to overseas service after retirement.

Crisis Corps assignments are set up similarly to professional consultancy positions. Each volunteer begins by reviewing a Position Description, which provides specific information about the project, the partner organization, the job duties and requirements, housing, and safety and security information. In contrast to the Peace Corps placement process, where a volunteer is agreeing to serve anywhere the agency may need them, each position in the Crisis Corps is uniquely recruited—like one may find in the private sector.

While the average Crisis Corps Volunteer is older and more experienced than the average PCV, CCVs serve at all ages and stages of life with their Crisis Corps experience serving them in a variety of ways.

Some Volunteers, like Alice Henry (Peace Corps Cote d'Ivoire '97-'01, Crisis Corps Guinea '03), begin their overseas service after retirement and bring a wealth of experience to their Crisis Corps assignments. After a career as a demographer working for many years in research, monitoring, and evaluation, Alice was able to apply those skills directly to her six month Crisis Corps assignment as a Food Aid Monitor with the World Food Program in Guinea. "I was nicely placed with WFP to use my (previous) professional experience redoing their monitoring and surveying materials and evaluating their school feeding program. My counterparts were really motivated, organized, and energetic...[The CCVs in Guinea] performed a valuable service and were really appreciated by our counterparts."

Other CCVs return to their original countries of service to give back again while capitalizing on the professional experience they have gained since Peace Corps. "[My assignment] required many of the skills and abilities that I gained from jobs that I have held since being a PCV in Thailand 16 years ago...I did not expect or realize that the Crisis Corps assignment would demonstrate to me how much I had learned and grown professionally after my original assignment. The Crisis Corps provided an opportunity for me to give back to my former country with more maturity, skills, wisdom, perception, and professionalism" - Mark Henley, Thailand Tsunami CCV.

Volunteers like Shimon Prohow, PCV Togo, Zambia CCV, are using Crisis Corps service to transition back to development work in the field while adding to their professional experience. "Crisis Corps allowed me to get attached in a real way again and on a ground level to a program that I could imagine and enact." While the reality of using a Crisis Corps assignment to transition back into overseas development work will vary with the situation, many CCVs have used their volunteer assignment to demonstrate to NGOs in the field just what they're capable of doing.

Crisis Corps Frequently Asked Questions

Am I eligible for the Crisis Corps?

In general, applicants are required to have successfully completed their two years of Peace Corps Volunteer service. However, candidates who were not able to complete their PC service due to reasons beyond their control, (i.e. evacuation), but who have completed at least one year of PCV service (not including training), may be considered as well.

How is the Crisis Corps experience different from Peace Corps?

Returned Crisis Corps Volunteers (CCVs) have reported that assignments are intense, challenging, and rewarding. Many volunteers have commented that their Crisis Corps assignment provided an avenue to obtain career-focused experience while accomplishing tangible results in a condensed period of time. Crisis Corps Volunteers are considered Peace Corps Volunteers, however the key difference is that your Crisis Corps assignment is short term. The rules and regulations that apply to Peace Corps Volunteers generally apply to Crisis Corps Volunteers, as well.

How does the Crisis Corps recruit and place Volunteers?

The Crisis Corps maintains a database of COS-ing Volunteers and Returned Peace Corps Volunteers interested in Crisis Corps work. When requests come in for Crisis Corps Volunteers, we search the database for candidates with the appropriate technical, language, and cross-cultural skills. Candidates with the appropriate skills sets will receive an email from a recruiter with a detailed position description. If the candidate is interested in the assignment then a telephone interview is conducted and professional references are checked, including references from Peace Corps staff (when available). It is particularly important that a candidate be able to work independently, with minimal support from Peace Corps staff. Finally, a candidate is invited and enters into the clearance process. Our goal is to have a CCV in country within 8-10 weeks of opening a project.

What should I do if I see a position that I am interested in, but have not been contacted by Crisis Corps?

If you see an assignment that you are qualified and available for, it is entirely appropriate to contact us first as no database search is ever exhaustive. We have over 3000 applicants in our database and assignments can be quite competitive, so we recommend being proactive about watching for positions that interest you. If you already have your application materials on file, simply send us an email at crisiscorps@peacecorps.gov or cover letter with the Position Title in the subject line so that the appropriate recruiter may evaluate your skills and follow up directly with you. Otherwise, when you apply, note the position you are interested in.

Will I only be considered for an assignment in my region of service?

The Crisis Corps seeks to make the strongest match possible between the request for assistance and the language, technical, and cross-cultural skills of the Volunteer. Much depends on the nature of the request and the backgrounds of available candidates. In certain instances, language skills and country knowledge are less relevant than strong technical skills.

Hotline For Returned Volunteers / From the Office of Domestic Programs

What type of training is provided for a Crisis Corps assignment?

Volunteers receive a short Peace Corps orientation upon arrival to country, generally three days. The partnering organization also provides an orientation. No additional training is provided as Crisis Corps selects Volunteers who already have the relevant skills.

Does Crisis Corps operate only in countries where there is an existing Peace Corps program?

No. The Crisis Corps can send Volunteers to a country that does not have a Peace Corps program as long as the safety and security of the Volunteers is reasonably assured and medical care is available. We have placed Crisis Corps Volunteers in Bosnia, a country that has not had a Peace Corps presence before, as well as in Venezuela, Czech Republic, and Sri Lanka – all countries in which Peace Corps had programs in the past.

Do Crisis Corps Volunteers receive the same benefits that Peace Corps Volunteers receive?

Crisis Corps Volunteers receive round trip airline tickets to and from their countries of assignment, settling-in, living, leave, and readjustment allowances, and medical care. CCVs are also eligible for Workmen's Compensation for service-related injuries as well as for Corps-Care. Crisis Corps Volunteers receive the same amount of readjustment allowance as do Peace Corps Volunteers. The full amount of this allowance is sent to their home of record upon completion of their assignment.

How do I apply?

The application process consists of sending Crisis Corps an application, resume, and a copy of your Description of Service (if available) via email, fax or mail. For more information please explore our website, send us an email or call us.

How do I contact Crisis Corps?
