Peace Corps Response

Telling Your Story to Transition Back and Land a Job

By: Jodi Hammer, RPCV Career Center Coordinator (RPCV Ecuador, 1994-97)

This article is reprinted with edits from the February 1, 2008, issue of Hotline.

Many of you are undoubtedly venturing into the infamous post-Peace Corps readjustment phase that most RPCVs talk so much about, struggling to reconcile the disparity between the simple, yet meaningful life you left behind in the distant land of your Peace Corps service and the mind-boggling complexity and pressure of post-Peace Corps life here in the States. Working hard to create a new home and facing the fact that your readjustment money is running out quickly leads to yet another pressure—that of having to get a job...and SOON! It's enough to make you consider running back to your dear little pueblo you just recently left behind, but for most of us, that's just not an option. So we do our best to deal with what comes, as difficult as it seems sometimes, and to move forward. But frustrating scenes like the following seem to come up time and time again, which thwart that process.

Scenario: You're at some social event—or in the bank, in the elevator, or wherever else you might run into people who realize you just returned from Peace Corps. And here comes the infamous question (the one that may cause more frustration and heartache than any other single question in the universe, at least for RPCVs): "WOW, SO HOW WAS YOUR PEACE CORPS EXPERIENCE?!" After responding to this question a few times, the cynic in you might see this inquiry as a misleading one, as it seems to indicate a real sense of interest far beyond the 20- to 30-second time period that encompasses the attention span of your listener. However, you might consider instead that this seeming lack of interest may be as much a reflection of the listener's inability to fully "get" the Peace Corps experience. In other words, the key to reducing at least part of readjustment frustration may come down to the age-old art of storytelling—how to tell your Peace Corps stories in a way that is engaging and facilitates an understanding by the non-RPCV. If done appropriately, storytelling can not only reduce your frustration by allowing you to avoid the glazed-over look from your audience, it can also ease your transition, and perhaps even land you an awesome job! Following are a few tips related to effective storytelling.

Tip #1: Respond to questions about your service in brief, targeted sound bites: two to four short, compelling sentences, maybe fewer! Perhaps start off by acknowledging how difficult it is to reply concisely to that question—"Wow, it's hard to put it into words how life-changing it was. I spent two years working in a rural village of Ecuador with 10 mothers' groups on child survival and health and HIV/AIDS prevention. It was an amazing experience." [PERIOD. Pause and take a breath.] This allows the interested listener to digest what you've said, and, IF interested in hearing more, to follow up with another question like, "Wow, so what exactly did you do related to child survival and health?" To which you would respond again with a few targeted sentences MAX. [Pause and BREATHE again.] This will allow your listener to take in the information in a digestible form and/or change the subject when they wish, no hard feelings, no sense of re-

Peace Corps Response

El Salvador

Save the Children US is requesting two Peace Corps Response Volunteers to provide support for an emergency preparedness project in the municipality of Izalco in El Salvador for Disaster Preparedness and Mitigation (DPM) program. The PCR Volunteers will support and strengthen existing emergency response teams in nine communities and train the remaining two communities in disaster preparedness activities to include formulating emergency plans, updating risk mapping procedures and risk maps, and conducting emergency preparedness drills. The Volunteers will also be responsible for coordinating all disaster preparedness activities with local government entities and other relevant organizations.

For more details and to apply, visit www.peacecorps.gov/response.

Jamaica

The Jamaica Red Cross, Manchester Chapter seeks a Peace Corps Response Volunteer for six months to serve as an Emergency Medical Technical Trainer. The Volunteer will provide basic-level Emergency Medical Technician (EMT-B) training to designated staff and volunteers (about 20-30 students); develop a path to EMT certification for students by researching, documenting and facilitating follow-up testing by recognized certification organizations; and research Continuing Education requirements necessary for students to maintain certification.

The Jamaica Greenhouse Growers Association is requesting a six-month Peace Corps Response Volunteer to serve as an Agricultural Disaster Planning Specialist. Jamaica annually experiences natural disasters that damage crops and livelihoods and drive people from their homes. With much of the island and its economy dependent on the agricultural sector, the greatest impact of disasters is not upon lives but upon livelihoods. Because of the cyclical nature of the hurricane season, the Jamaican government has identified agricultural disaster planning as a high-priority goal. The purpose of this project is to create an overall disaster plan for independent farmers island-wide, especially focused on but not limited to those engaged in greenhouse farming.

For more details and to apply, visit www.peacecorps.gov/response.

Malawi *

 This program requires that volunteers serve a full twelve-month term.*

The Ministry of Local Government and Rural Development in Malawi is requesting Peace Corps Response Volunteers to work as HIV/AIDS Technical Assistants at the district level beginning in November 2008. The Technical Assistants will provide HIV/AIDS support to the Director of Planning and Development, the District AIDS Coordinator and the Office of Social Welfare; assist with development of Community Based Organizations (CBOs) through capacity building, training, communication and resource identification; create and modify M&E tools and financial spreadsheets; and strengthen relationships among stakeholders.

For more details and to apply, visit www.peacecorps.gov/response.

Panama

Panama is home to seven distinct ethnic groups, several of which have been allotted their own “comarcas,” or reservations. Reservation life enables groups to practice their customs and speak traditional languages. However, these “comarcas” are also where the majority of Panama’s extreme poverty is concentrated. An average family of 10 to 12 people survives on an income of less than $3/day. Furthermore, the majority of children suffer from diarrhea caused by water-borne illnesses, which results from the custom of using streams and rivers for washing, bathing and waste disposal. To improve access to potable water, the Mayor of Tabartí and Water Committee Secretary are requesting a four-month Rural Water System Specialist experienced in the construction of gravity-fed water systems and educating community members in water system maintenance and basic hygiene topics.

For more details and to apply, visit www.peacecorps.gov/response.

Zambia

The National HIV/AIDS/STI/TB Council is urgently requesting Peace Corps Response Volunteers (PCRVs) to help build the capacity of Provincial AIDS Coordination Advisors and other Provincial staff by supporting an effort to improve data collection methodologies and reporting structures. The duties and responsibilities of the PCRVs will be to implement effective data collection methodologies and analytical tools, provide training to ensure data integrity and continuity throughout all provinces and districts, and strengthen capacity of reporting capabilities.

For more details and to apply, visit www.peacecorps.gov/response.

How to Apply

jection! The key is in putting the information out there in SMALL sound bites.

Tip #2: This storytelling advice also rings true for job interviews and networking events. Remember to keep your sound bites SHORT and targeted to the person asking the question or the organization they represent. For example, if you are networking with someone from the CDC (Centers for Disease Control), you might focus more on the health aspects of your Peace Corps service, and talk about some of the secondary projects in HIV/AIDS even if you weren't a health volunteer. Remember, your sound bites are a lure that can, if effectively utilized, draw people in to your story and experiences. Apply this same principle in the job interview. When someone asks about an aspect of your service, respond with a concise answer that connects the skills you learned in Peace Corps with the skills necessary at the job for which you're interviewing. As you highlight your background, remember to work in other stories too—not just Peace Corps ones—in order to show your diversity and range of experiences (even if some were in college). You'll come to see that the art of interviewing really comes down to the art of storytelling (and I don't mean story WEAVING—make sure what you say is the truth!)

If you would like more practice telling your story as a tool to finding employment, consider attending the next Career Event taking place in Washington, DC, from October 7-10. This four-day event will include interactive sessions on networking, interviewing and résumé writing, among others, and opportunities to actually put into practice what you've learned while interacting with employers participating in the career fair on Thursday, October 9. For more information or to register for the event, contact rvsevents@peacecorps.gov.

Tip #3: Finally, consider connecting with your local Peace Corps recruitment office to tell your story as part of a recruitment event—there are Regional Recruiting Offices spanning the entire U.S. so there are bound to be periodic recruiting events scheduled for almost every region of the country. You might volunteer to be an RPCV guest speaker at a General Information Meeting - a recruitment event where folks interested in learning more about Peace Corps gather together and talk to a recruiter and/or returned volunteer. Though this is not the time to tell your “largest amoeba” story, you'll certainly get a captive audience of idealistic folks who are chomping at the bit to hear the stories of real, live returned Peace Corps Volunteers. You might really enjoy the chance to share some of your experience and answer questions while helping others learn more about Peace Corps opportunities. To contact your local Peace Corps recruiting office, call (800) 424-8580 and press option “1.”

So, go forth and conquer with these storytelling tips, and don't forget to share your successes with us by sending an email to rvs@peacecorps.gov. You might just be the author of an article in an upcoming Hotline article about the success of storytelling in getting a job. Happy storytelling!

For more ideas on how to share your rich and stimulating Peace Corps story with others, please see the December 15, 2006, and February 1, 2007, issues of Hotline.

SPONSORED BY RETURNED VOLUNTEER SERVICES,
OFFICE OF DOMESTIC PROGRAMS,
U.S. PEACE CORPS

Peace Corps' Office of Domestic Programs, Returned Volunteer Services Introduces SIGI³

What is SIGI³?

SIGI³ is a highly interactive career assessment tool that is designed to help you make informed and rational decisions about your field of study and career. SIGI³ can help you assess your work-related values, interests, and skills. SIGI³ will help you examine key motivators and match work-related values, interests, and skills to educational and career pathways. First you will enter your work-related preferences, and then SIGI³ will search its built-in library and find those careers that most closely match your preferences. SIGI³'s library is so large that it may well find career options that you never even considered or knew existed!

How do I register for access to SIGI³?

To access SIGI³, e-mail RVS at rvsinfo@peacecorps.gov with your full name, country and dates of Peace Corps service.

SIGI 3 is licensed to the United States Peace Corps. Use of this license by individuals not officially and directly authorized by Peace Corps' Office of Domestic Programs/Returned Volunteer Services is prohibited**
