

Operational Logistics Officer

The world moves fast. And there's one agency that drives that pace — the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). As an employer, we offer a dynamic environment that allows you to face new challenges and further your logistics career every day. With an emphasis on skill building and variety, a career here will move as fast as the world around you.

The Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) offers two exciting and challenging career tracks for those interested in meeting CIA's world-wide logistical support mission: Operational Logistics Officer and Logistics Services Officer.

The Role of an Operational Logistics Officer

Logistics offers the unique opportunity to work with an accomplished, diverse team, providing a full range of operational logistical support across the country and overseas. The work includes providing logistical support and managing the overall logistic processes in support of our customers' mission objectives; leveraging existing networks and expanding others; anticipating mission needs and operational requirements and offering alternatives and advice; and evaluating, redesigning, and implementing logistics processes for mission support.

A career as an Operational Logistics Officer requires a commitment to serve wherever the mission requires— including worldwide deployment to sometimes harsh and dangerous environments. Throughout your career, you must maintain an ongoing readiness to travel and relocate to meet short and long term organizational requirements.

What It Takes to Join the CIA

We look for highly motivated, bright, resourceful individuals who seek new challenges. Success requires excellent interpersonal skills, oral and written communications skills, a knack for organization, and a commitment to customer service, as well as a willingness to travel on short and long term assignments to domestic and overseas locations.

Manage the critical details of a critical mission.

You may qualify for a position as an Operational Logistics Officer if you hold a bachelor's degree in Business Management or Administration, or a related degree that emphasizes logistics, transportation management, or business operations. In lieu of a degree, consideration is taken for relevant work experience in the military or private sector. We favor candidates with relevant work or internship experience.

Overseas travel and/or relocation are required. All candidates must be US citizens and successfully complete a medical evaluation, polygraph interview, and extensive background investigation.

Student Trainee, Co-Op and Summer Internship positions in Logistics are available to undergraduate and graduate students majoring in a business field. The qualifications are similar to those for entry-level professionals.

The Rewards of Service

As valued members of the CIA community, you will be part of the comprehensive CIA employee benefits program. Salaries are competitive and negotiable, based on qualifications and experience. Most positions are in the Washington, DC/Northern Virginia area.

A Fast-Paced Logistics Career

Becoming an Operational Logistics Officer gives clear direction to your career. Your crucial contributions will impact our missions, our community, and the customers that depend on us. We deal in intelligence, and we're counting on yours to fulfill our mission.

The CIA is America's premier intelligence agency, and we are committed to building and maintaining a work force as diverse as the nation we serve.
