These are my comments concerning the ERISA that the Labor Department proposes: I support an automatic enrollment of workers into retirement savings plans. Many new workers to the job force, such as recent college graduates, do not think retirement saving is necessary when they are only in their twenties. The age of retirement 60 or above is quite incomprehensible to twenty year olders. I suggest that companies should invest employee contributions into a stable value fund or a money market fund. Automatic enrollment of workers into retirement savings plans would be painless and practical preparation for future retirees, who may not have any retirement income otherwise.

"A positive attitude is a powerful force."
