Iowa Association of Regional Councils

The 18 regional councils serving local governments in Iowa offer a variety of technical assistance programs. They are a voluntary association that offer a forum for local officials to discuss mutual problems and address issues on a regional basis.

Types of programs offered by Iowa regional councils include workforce development, administration and operation of transit systems for the handicapped and elderly, planning and technical assistance for regional housing authorities, circuit riders, economic development, joint equipment acquisition, federal procurement and revolving loan programs.

Councils also assist member local governments in developing plans and programs such as recreation plans or zoning/subdivision ordinances. In addition, councils provide application and administrative assistance to members requesting federal and state grants and loans.

The state association board is comprised of executive directors of each member council.

The Kansas Association of Regional Councils

Since, 1968, multi-county regional planning commissions have been working to serve the needs of Kansas citizens and local governments. Even prior to 1968, citizens and local officials were discussing the need to coordinate the plans and services of local, state, and federal governments on a regional basis.

In 1971, an executive order laid the groundwork for the creation of additional multi-county regional planning commissions in the state by officially establishing eight planning and development regions. Since then, some of these regional organizations have disbanded.

There are currently five known regional councils serving many of the local governments in the state.

The Kansas Association of Regional Councils is currently inactive. However, there are still planning commissions working throughout the state and are listed in the following. Contact information is for each individual agency, there is no single point of contact.
