During our stakeholder webinar we briefly touched on commercial refrigerated cabinets that are used for beer dispensing. We would like to see these models added to the new specification. For us, these models are manufactured identical to our back bar coolers. The only difference is that we have provided a hole in the top to mount a draft arm. We do not mount these here....they are field mounted only.

I do not believe we need to create a new product category for these products. I would think it would fall under solid door commercial refrigerators since that is what they really are. I can send energy test data if you would like. These direct draw dispensers are very common in our industry and at least 6 of the manufacturers that were represented in the webinar on February 28th make a product like this. Please see attached product specification sheet. Let me know if I can provide you with any other information. Thanks for your time.
