Competency Development Activities

Competency Definition

Deals effectively with pressure; remains optimistic and persistent, even under adversity; recovers quickly from setbacks.

Developmental Activity Levels

All (A)

Applies to all competency levels

Beginner-Basic Knowledge (B)

A person at the Beginner-Basic Knowledge level has limited experience applying the competency. He/she applies general knowledge in common situations but has limited practical experience in applying the competency in a work environment presenting more complex situations.

Mid-level (M)

A person with mid-level proficiency has applied the competency repeatedly and successfully in the performance of his/her job but still has much to learn about the advanced aspects or behaviors associated with the competency. A person at this level can usually apply the competency on his/her own.

High (H)

A person at the High level has extensive knowledge of and experience with this competency and can apply the competency exceptionally well on the job without assistance. At this level one is an expert and has enough experience to teach the competency to others.

H Hamel, Gary and Valikangas, Lisa, The Quest for Resilience, Harvard Business Review, September 1, 2003. HBR 0309C

Continued success no longer hinges on momentum. Rather, it rides on resilience--on the ability to dynamically reinvent business models and strategies as circumstances change. Strategic resilience is not about responding to a onetime crisis or rebounding from a setback. It's about continually anticipating and adjusting to trends that can permanently impair the overall success of the organization.

H Coutu, Diane L., How Resilience Works, Harvard Business Review, May 1, 2002. HBR 0205B

In the business arena, resilience has found its way onto the list of qualities sought in employees.

The book offers a number of useful strategies to put into practice and an appendix of worksheets that address the concepts covered in each of the chapters.

Activities

A Practice looking at changes by first analyzing the benefits of the change and then addressing what needs to be done to implement the change.

A Set aside time each day and each week for personal activities that alleviate stress.

A Learn and use stress-reduction techniques such as deep breathing, mental imagery, deep relaxation, or meditation.

A Identify three ways in which you can include some form of relaxation in your day.

B After you have dealt with a conflict situation, ask for feedback from your supervisor on how you handled it.

B Make a list for a week of things that cause you stress and analyze it to see if there is a pattern. See if there are any ways to remove or alter these activities to reduce your stress.

H Plan systematic debriefs of situations which do not go the way you planned or expected. Involve relevant players and stakeholders to discuss what happened, what worked, what didn't work and what can be learned for the future.

Coaching Suggestions for Managers

B If a team member experiences a setback or failure, ask that person to write down what you see as the reason and what he or she could have done to avoid it. Give the team member feedback on their analysis. If a situation arises that is similar, monitor the team member's use of the knowledge gained previously.

H Assign people to “pressure cooker” situations temporarily and then debrief them on how to handle them more efficiently.

H Ask staff to establish systematic debriefing processes for dealing with problematic situations and setbacks. Encourage them to use the debriefs to reduce the negative impact of those situations and to capture learning for the future.

H Ask staff to identify things that help them recover from stress at work and encourage them to build those things into their daily routine.
