THE GRAND JURY CHARGES:

INTRODUCTORY ALLEGATIONS

At all times relevant to this Indictment:

1. In or about August 1997, defendants MICAELA RENEE DUTSON and TONY DUTSON began marketing abusive tax avoidance programs which had no legitimate purpose and were designed solely to assist people in evading assessment and collection of federal income taxes. Defendants, who were married to one another, initially operated this scheme from their home and an office in Tigard, Oregon; they later moved to Arizona. MICAELA RENEE DUTSON and TONY DUTSON marketed their tax avoidance programs through seminars and individual meetings. Between August 1997 and at least October 2005, the defendants MICAELA RENEE DUTSON and TONY DUTSON collected hundreds of thousands of dollars in fees from “clients” who paid them to help the “clients” hide assets and avoid payment of federal income taxes.

2. The defendants, MICAELA RENEE DUTSON and TONY DUTSON, sold their abusive tax avoidance programs using various business entities, including “Power Unlimited,” “Diamond Productions International,” and “Watermark Financial.”

3. From in or about August 1997 until at least October 2005, the defendants marketed several different abusive tax avoidance programs, including so-called “trust” programs and a program referred to as the “straw man strategy.” Defendants also advised paying clients how to respond to Internal Revenue Service (“IRS”) notices and efforts to collect income taxes.

4. Defendants marketed so-called “trust” packages consisting of corporations and entities the defendants referred to variously as “irrevocable pure trust organizations” and “irrevocable business trusts” (referred to hereafter simply as “so-called ‘trusts’” or “trusts”). Defendants falsely advised clients that they could legally avoid paying taxes by putting their assets and income into the so-called “trusts” that they sold. Defendants also falsely told clients that by putting their assets and income into the so-called “trusts,” they could legally protect assets from seizure by creditors, including the IRS.

5. Defendants typically charged approximately $1,500 to $2,500 to establish each so-called “trust” in a package. Defendants encouraged clients to purchase multiple “trusts” by telling clients that their assets would be more secure if they were spread over multiple “trusts.” Defendants thus collected thousands and thousands of dollars from most clients for the establishment of these so-called “trusts”.

6. Defendants also charged clients an annual maintenance fee or “trustee fee” for each “trust;” these annual fees were typically approximately $250 for each “trust.”

7. Defendants structured the so-called “trusts” to ensure that even while assets and income were concealed in multiple “trust” entities, clients would maintain complete control over their assets and income.

8. Defendants falsely informed clients that, by using their “trust” packages, neither the entities in the “trust” packages nor the clients had an obligation to file tax returns. The defendants falsely advised clients that filing federal income tax returns is optional and that in any event, by depositing income and assets into “trust” bank accounts, clients had divested their income and assets to the so-called “trusts.”

9. To conceal clients’ ownership of real estate and vehicles from the IRS, the defendants advised clients to transfer title of real estate and vehicles to the names of “trusts.” To falsely create proof of “trust” ownership, the defendants advised clients to create leases indicating that the clients were leasing assets such as real estate from the “trusts.” The defendants further advised clients to create bogus liens claiming that the clients’ “trusts” had secured interests in the clients’ property, thereby reducing the apparent equity in the property and fraudulently discouraging the IRS from seeking judgments against the property.

10. Defendants told clients that they must not disclose details of their “trusts” to third parties. Indeed, “trust” documents included secrecy requirements that prohibited clients from disclosing documents, records, or other written information regarding the internal affairs or operations of the “trust,” absent approval of the board of the “trust.”

11. Defendants advised clients to take steps to prevent employers from reporting income payments to clients. For example, defendants directed one client to claim foreign status by filing an IRS form W-8 “Certificate of Foreign Status” with employers.

12. Defendants directed clients to follow elaborate procedures to respond to demands and notices from the IRS. Defendants assured their clients that if they followed these procedures correctly, they would not have to pay the income taxes demanded by the IRS. These procedures included, among other things, sending various documents to the IRS and Secretary of the Treasury. Defendants directed clients to inscribe the documents with specific language which referenced federal statutes. Among other things, defendants told certain clients that to avoid paying taxes on income, they must obtain copies of their birth or naturalization certificates and Social Security cards, inscribe certain language on these documents, and send the documents to the Secretary of the Treasury.

13. Defendants also sold an abusive tax avoidance program referred to as the “straw man,” strategy, which defendants told clients would protect them from tax liability. Specifically, defendants told clients that at birth or naturalization of every citizen, the United States establishes an account in each citizen’s name with an amount of money in this account. Defendants further explained that they could help clients access this account by a complex set of procedures which they referred to as “taking control” of the client’s “straw man.” The procedures included making various filings with the Secretary of the Treasury. Defendants told clients that once a person “took control” of his/her “straw man,” the account could be used to pay liabilities such as tax obligations. Defendants charged clients thousands of dollars for the “straw man” package, which included direction on how to “take control” of the “straw man.”

14. To win their clients’ confidence, defendants told clients that they had a high level of legal and tax knowledge. Defendant MICAELA RENEE DUTSON was licensed as an attorney in Oregon until January 2002, and the defendants used her status as a lawyer to build trust with their clients. The defendants referred to TONY DUTSON as a paralegal from time to time, and regularly referred to law books and treatises in support of their claims of legitimacy.

15. The defendants each failed to file income tax returns on the income they earned from their promotion of their abusive tax programs.

16. During the life of the conspiracy, the defendants sold clients more than 150 “trusts” and dozens of other abusive tax avoidance products, such as the “straw man.” Through their tax avoidance schemes, defendants helped clients hide millions of dollars in income from the IRS. Defendants’ clients have since been assessed over $8 million in taxes, interest and penalties due and owing.
