Product information, including uses/applications and source(s) of imports:

This bill covers woven fabrics of vicuna hair, a rare and expensive fiber. The vicuna is similar to the llama and alpaca and is native to the Andean regions of Bolivia, Peru, Chile, Ecuador, and Argentina. Vicuna fibers are among the thinnest and most luxurious of any fine animal hair, with a diameter of 12 microns, compared with cashmere, which has a diameter of 15 microns.⁴ The subject fabric is imported for use in jackets and coats, and is retailed primarily to specialty tailors, as mass production of garments using this fabric is cost prohibitive. Woven fabrics containing 85 percent or more by weight of vicuna hair are provided for in HTS subheadings 5111.11.70 and 5111.19.60, which cover certain woven fabrics of carded wool or fine animal hair, and HTS subheadings 5112.11.60 and 5112.19.95, which cover certain woven fabrics of combed fine animal hair. As the vicuna are a protected species, vicuna fibers and fiber products may only be imported from countries where the vicuna population is classified as “threatened” versus “endangered,” currently Argentina, Bolivia, Chile,⁵ and Peru.

³ The sponsor/proponent did not identify any additional beneficiaries of this bill.

⁴ The lower the micron size, the finer the fiber.

⁵ Products imported from Chile already enter the United States duty-free under provisions of the U.S.-Chile FTA.
