Product information, including uses/applications and source(s) of imports:

Rayon is an artificial fiber produced from cellulosic materials such as wood pulp, which is dissolved into a viscose solution and extruded through perforated metal disks (spinnerets) into an acid bath to produce long strands. These filament strands are gathered into a loose form called tow, which can be cut or stretched to produce fibers. Dutiable U.S. imports under HTS subheading 5502.00.00, which covers all artificial filament tow (cellulose acetate, protein fibers, alginate fibers, and all rayon fibers), totaled $14.2 million in 2007. Japan was the primary supplier, with about $12.3 million in shipments, followed by Germany, with about $1.9 million.
