Volunteers

Urban Connections is an outreach program of the U.S. Forest Service's Eastern Region that bridges the gap between urban residents and the national forests in their backyard!

Working with the Forest Service's State & Private Forestry and Research and Development branches, Urban Connections provides opportunities for urban audiences to get involved in natural resource activities on national forests and their cities.

Forests in Your Backyard

Most forests and one tallgrass prairie in the Eastern Region are only a day's drive away from cities such as Detroit, Boston, Milwaukee, Chicago, and Minneapolis/St. Paul. Recreational activities abound on forests - such as sight-seeing, camping, hiking, boating, fishing, and biking.

We Need Your Help!

So many exciting partnership and volunteer opportunities await you with the Forest Service. If you are interested in getting involved or want more information about Urban Connections and the Forest Service, visit our web site at:
