I think that people should be warned when making a transaction that they will cause themselves an overdraft fee if they continue. This gives them a chance to transfer money to the required account before they incur that fee. I don't think banks should be allowed to have their overdraft fee cause another overdraft fee which caused another overdraft fee, etc, etc. My son ran up over $600 in overdraft fees for an original overdraft for a spend of less than $10. He had no idea it was happening. So, not only do I think that consumers should be warned about an upcoming charge, but I think that charge should only be allowed to be applied once.
