Patterns, Trends and Prospects

Executive Summary

This study of foundation funding in Appalachia examines how the Region compares to the rest of the nation in obtaining funding from all types of private foundations. The study is based on the most comprehensive data available from the Foundation Center in New York City. Based on this data, the report examines the distribution of grants from major foundations to all types of organizations in each state and city within the Region, and the locations of both large and small foundations within the Region. Detailed state-by-state data are reported in accompanying appendices.

A brief summary is provided of the results from three conferences on foundation funding that the Appalachian Regional Commission (ARC) co-sponsored with the Development District Association of Appalachia (DDAA), the W.K. Kellogg Foundation and the Rural Local Initiatives Support Corporation (LISC) in the summer of 1998.

In addition, the study examines how successful the Local Development Districts (LDDs) and their affiliated non-profit organizations within the Region have been in raising funds through private foundations and what could be done to enhance the grant-raising capacity of LDDs and other development organizations in the Region.

In short, the results show that Appalachia's region-wide grant total in 1996 was $298 million, up from $247 million in 1992 for all awards over $10,000 made by top 1,000 foundations. As a point of comparison, Appalachia's share of all domestically awarded grants was 4.6 percent in 1996, far less than Appalachia's 8.2 percent population share of the United States. On a per capita basis, Appalachia had a per capita average of $13.68 in private foundation grants, as compared to the US average which was $24.50 per citizen for the $6.5 billion of domestic grant awards made by the top foundations.

There were nearly 2,000 foundations of all sizes located within the Region that awarded grants of $1,000 or more during 1996. Total grants amounted to $592 million, although not all of this was awarded within the Region. The assets of these foundations amounted to nearly $12 billion in 1996. As a share of the assets of all foundations operating in the United States, Appalachian-based foundations hold about 4.5 percent.

These data indicate that Appalachia, as a region, is under performing in securing private foundation grant funding. A high proportion of these grant awards is concentrated in one geographic sub-region of Appalachia, with Pennsylvania-based recipients accounting for roughly half of all grants of $10,000 or more awarded in the region, totaling $130 million in 1992 and $160 million in 1996. ARC's Local Development Districts and their affiliated non-profit organizations have won relatively few grants, with perhaps Pennsylvania's and North Carolina's LDDs registering the best track record. Overall, there appears to be a great deal of room for improving the grant-winning capabilities of the vast array of community and economic development organizations within the Region.

Foundation Funding in the Appalachian Region in the 1990s: Patterns, Trends and Prospects

I. Introduction

The Appalachian Regional Commission (ARC) conducted this study of foundation funding in the Region to determine how Appalachia compared to the rest of the nation in obtaining funding from all types of private foundations. In addition, ARC wanted to analyze the distribution of grants from major foundations to all types of organizations in each state and city within the Region, and the location of both large and small foundations within the Region. Finally, the Commission wanted to know whether the Local Development Districts (LDDs), and their affiliated non-profit organizations within the Region, had been successful in raising funds through private foundations and what could be done to enhance the grant-raising capacity of LDDs and other community-based development organizations.

A key reason for ARC's interest in foundation funding is that private foundations have played an important national and regional role in stimulating innovative economic development practices and models. Moreover, foundations have helped build community capacity for civic and economic development activities. In addition, private foundation funding has helped extend and multiply the impact of various public sources of funding for economic development, especially in high poverty areas throughout the nation and in the Region. In an era of diminishing public funding for economic and community development, the ability of community-based organizations to seek and win more private foundation funding is an important opportunity for leveraging additional funding.

II. Overview

Foundation funding for all purposes plays a relatively small role in total philanthropic giving in the United States, comprising only 13.3 percent of the $150 billion in private gifts in 1996.¹ Yet, foundation funding still represents a significant source of social investment capital in program areas such as education, human services, health, community and civic improvement, and arts and humanities. In 1996 foundation grant awards totaled $13.8 billion, and the assets of the 42,000 grant-making foundations totaled to $41 billion, according the Foundation Center's annual tabulation.² Estimates for 1997 indicate that foundations gave $15.5 billion in grant awards, an increase of 12 percent.

In 1996, throughout the United States, the largest share of foundation grants were awarded to education-related projects, which garnered over 25 percent of all grant dollars, while human services projects were awarded 17 percent of grant monies. The balance of the total grant dollars awarded breaks out as follows: health 16 percent; community and civic improvement 12 percent; arts and humanities 12 percent; environment 5 percent; science and technology 4 percent; international affairs 3 percent; the social sciences 3 percent; and religion 2 percent.³

Types of Foundations: Foundations are categorized typically into four types: independent; corporate or company sponsored; community; and operating foundations.

- Independent foundations are the most numerous—nearly 37,000 of the 42,000 on file with the Foundation Center—with an asset base of nearly $227 billion of the $268 billion of total foundation assets in the United States, and grant awards of $10.7 billion in 1996.⁴ Independent foundations derive their funds from individuals or family gifts, with the largest being represented by such well known foundations as Ford, W.K. Kellogg, and the Rockefeller.
- Corporate or company-sponsored foundations, by contrast, are those that derive their funds from a profit-making company, such as the AT&T Foundation and Ford Motor Company Fund. Corporate and company-sponsored foundations are less numerous than independent foundations, with just under 2,000 on record with the Foundation Center, and total assets of $9.4 billion and grants of nearly $1.8 billion in 1996.
- Community foundations are similar to independent foundations but they derive their funds from many donors, rather than single donors, and are classified as public charities by the Internal Revenue Service. In addition, community foundations are usually dedicated to promoting philanthropy and grant-making within a well defined geographic region, such as states, counties or cities. There were 411 community foundations registered in the Foundation Center database for 1996, with assets totaling $15 billion and grants of nearly $1 billion
- Operating foundations award few or no grants since they are set up and endowed to operate specific social, economic or research programs as determined by their governing board. Indeed, some independent and corporate foundations are operating foundations.⁵

The immediate future outlook for growth in foundation giving is quite robust, even after accounting for the recent stock market adjustment. Increased asset levels for all types of foundations will continue to fuel the growth in grant-making, as foundations act to bring giving into balance with the recent growth in the asset base. The greatest growth in grant-making has been registered by the independent and community foundations, which have increased their grant awards by 14 percent and 18 percent respectively.

Overview of Funding Trends within Appalachia

Appalachia's region-wide grant total in 1996 for all awards over $10,000 made by the top 1,000 foundations was $298 million, up from $247 million in 1992.⁶ As a point of comparison, Appalachia's share of all domestically awarded grants was 4.6 percent in 1996, far less than Appalachia's 8.2 percent population share of the United States. On a per capita basis, Appalachia had a per capita average of $13.68 in private foundation grants, as compared to the US average which was $24.50 per citizen for the $6.5 billion of domestic grant awards made by the top 1,000 foundations in the United States.

There were nearly 2,000 foundations of all sizes located within the Region that awarded grants of $1,000 or more during 1996.⁷ Total grants amounted to $592 million, although not all of this was awarded within the Region. The assets of these foundations amounted to nearly $12 billion in 1996. As a share of the assets of all foundations operating in the United States, Appalachian-based foundations hold about 4.5 percent of the assets.

Clearly, these data indicate that Appalachia, as a region, is under performing in securing private foundation grant funding. Perhaps more disturbing is the fact that a high proportion of these grant awards is concentrated in one geographic sub-region of Appalachia, with Pennsylvania-based recipients accounting for roughly half of all grants of $10,000 or more awarded in the region, totaling $130 million in 1992 and $160 million in 1996. Moreover, ARC's Local Development Districts and their affiliated non-profit organizations have won relatively few grants, with perhaps Pennsylvania's and North Carolina's LDDs registering the best track record. Overall, there appears to be a great deal of room for improving the grant-winning capabilities of the vast array of community and economic development organizations within the Region.

III. Foundation Grants to Appalachian Communities: 1992 vs. 1996

Foundation grants to all types of recipient organizations within the Appalachian portion of the thirteen states were researched for ARC by the Foundation Center in New York. The study examined Appalachia's share of grants made in 1992 and 1996 using a database that covers that top 1,000 foundations making awards of $10,000 or more. The volume and change in grant awards were examined for the 1992 and 1996 period because this was the largest period of expansion in foundation assets and giving since the mid 1970s.

For 1996, the Foundation Center's data base covers about $7.3 billion in grants, of which, $6.5 billion was awarded domestically in the United States. Total giving by U.S. foundations in 1996 was $13.8 billion, including international awards. Thus, the sample examined for Appalachian grant awards represents about 53 percent of all grant awards made in the U.S. during 1996, according to Internal Revenue Service filings. It should be emphasized that the sample therefore excludes smaller grants given by large and small foundations.⁸ Nevertheless, this database is the most comprehensive available for researching grant recipient organizations by geographic region.

Trends in Appalachian Grant Awards

In 1996, Appalachia's total for grant awards of $10,000 or more grew to $298.2 million from $247 million in 1992. As noted above, Appalachia's share of domestically awarded grants was far less than its population share, registering only 4.6 percent of grants as compared to 8.2 percent of the U.S. population. The growth rate of grant awards to Appalachia was 10 percent in the 1992-96 period after adjusting for inflation, while nationwide domestic grants awards grew by nearly 22 percent in real terms.

As Table 1 indicates, Pennsylvania ranks first by far in total grant awards, accounting for over half of all awards in both 1992 and 1996. North Carolina, New York and Tennessee together account for about 30 percent of the Region's grants. Alabama, Kentucky and West Virginia make up the third tier of states in terms of grant dollars, with South Carolina making impressive gains in 1996. Most Appalachian states gained in the volume and number of grants awarded, with eight registering gains in the total dollar amount of grant awards, and seven showing gains in the total number of grant awards in the Appalachian portions of the thirteen states.

Strong growth in the dollar amount of awards was exhibited by two states that had a particularly low volume of awards in 1992, but posted large gains in 1996, with South Carolina's awards increasing by 200 percent, and Mississippi by nearly 82 percent. In addition, two states with a good track records in winning awards grew significantly, with New York's awards growing by 85 percent during the period, and Alabama by 42 percent. By and large, the Region enjoyed significant gains during a period of high national growth in grant giving. There was, however, some slippage by Ohio, and states that traditionally have had a strong foundation base, particularly North Carolina, which experienced an 18 percent drop in grant awards, and Tennessee which showed a 26 percent decline in awards between 1992 and 1996.

For community foundations only discretionary grants are included. Grants to individuals are not included.

Grant Trends within Recipient States and Cities

Analysis of grant recipient data at the state level reveals a high concentration of grant awards in particular cities within each state, especially in the largest cities, or those that have a higher density of universities and non-profit organizations. Overall, there were 367 cities in 1996 that received 3,525 grants amounting to $298 million. Most prominent in the Region are the Pittsburgh-based recipients which accounted for about 43 percent of all grants awarded in the region, totaling $107 million in 1992 and $130 million in 1996. Indeed, Pittsburgh were excluded from the Appalachian sample, the Region's adjusted per capita funding for private foundation grants falls from $13.69 to $7.82 per capita, as compared to the U.S. average of $24.50 per citizen for the $6.5 billion of domestic grant awards made by the top 1,000 foundations in the United States.

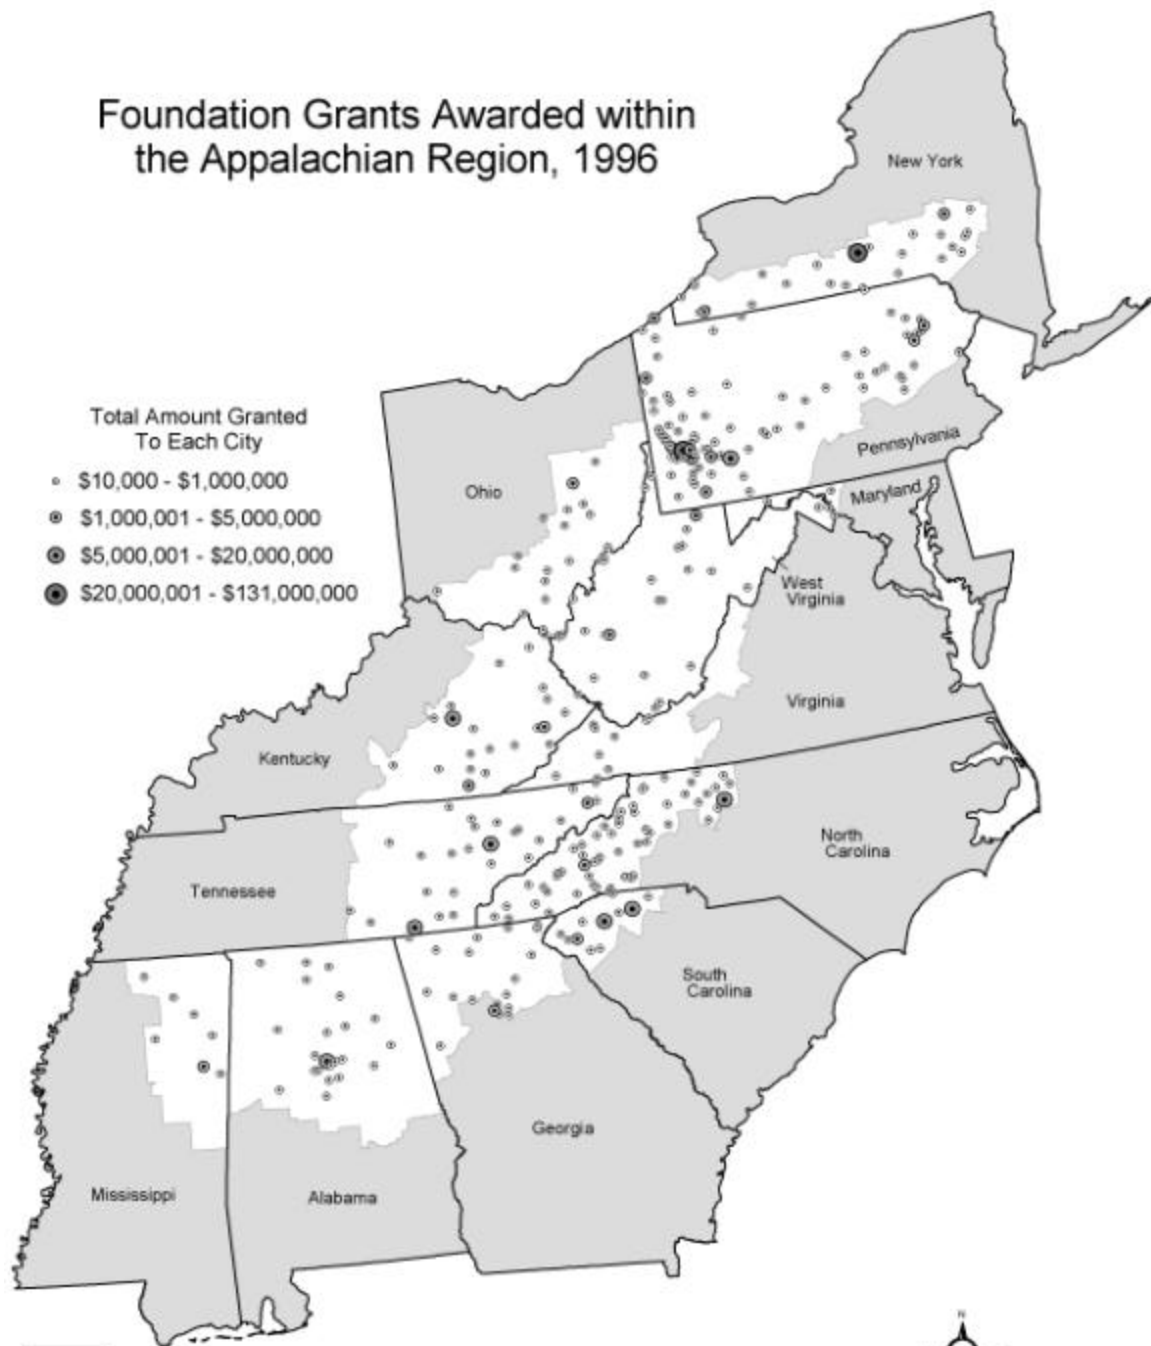

As the map on the next page shows, in addition to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, several major cities stand out as leaders in receiving grants including: Winston Salem, North Carolina; Birmingham, Alabama; Ithaca, New York; Chattanooga, Tennessee; Berea, Kentucky; Spartanburg/Greenville, South Carolina; and Knoxville, Tennessee. These cities consistently stand out as the leaders in grant awards, but their relative ranking varies in 1992 and 1996 (as shown by the detailed data contained in Appendix 1).

Population size of cities, however, doesn't account for the differences in the value of grant awards among cities, as many smaller cities have managed to win relatively large grant shares because of the activities of their colleges, universities and non-profits. Berea, Kentucky and Ithaca, New York stand out as examples of small cities that consistently win relatively large shares of grant awards. Moreover, there does seem to be an association between the number and size of foundations actually located within the Appalachian portion of a state, and the volume of grants received, although the correlation does not appear to be strong once Pittsburgh is excluded from the sample.

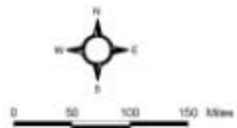

In addition, community foundations play an important role in attracting grant awards which these foundations then re-grant to worthy projects within their communities. Community foundations are well represented in several states within the Region, including foundation-rich Pennsylvania, North Carolina, New York, Tennessee, Ohio and South Carolina, but other states have few, if any community foundations within the Appalachian portions of the states.

Overall, this sample paints a portrait of a region that is underachieving in winning its share of grants from the top 1,000 foundations. While these findings may partially reflect the fact that most of these larger foundations are not located within Appalachia, there is no direct evidence that indicates Appalachian-based organizations perform any better in winning grants from smaller foundations, even those located within the Region. Unfortunately, these issues cannot be readily resolved because of the lack of a single, comprehensive data base on grants of all sizes by geographic location. It is possible, however, to examine trends for the assets and total giving by foundations located within the Region, although this data will not show how much is given within the Region.

IV. Foundations Located Within Appalachia: Types, Assets and Giving

The location, number and asset value of the foundations in Appalachia were researched by the Foundation Center using its database The Guide to U.S. Foundations for 1992 and 1996.⁹ In 1996, there were 1,974 foundations located in the Region, up from the 1,692 foundations in 1992. As Table 2 indicates, total assets rose from $8.1 billion in 1992 to $11.9 billion in 1996, and total giving by Appalachian-based foundations grew by nearly 29 percent over this period, rising to $592 million in 1996.

It should be emphasized, however, that the totals for giving do not represent grants awarded within Appalachia, but rather are the sums of all grants given to grantees both within and outside the Region. Indeed, the Foundation Center's database does not disclose the grant recipients' locations, so regional subtotals cannot be computed.

Source: The Guide to U.S. Foundations, 1997 Edition, the Foundation Center, New York City, 1998. This database includes 35,765 foundations making grants of at least one dollar during the fiscal year, although this compilation was limited to those foundations making grants of $1,000 or more.

In total giving, assets and gifts, the top states were Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Tennessee, New York, and Alabama in both 1992 and 1996. By all measures, Pennsylvanian foundations represent the powerhouse of the Appalachian Region, accounting for more than half the Region's assets and total giving, and 38 percent of gifts received in 1996. North Carolina is a distant second based on total giving and assets, followed closely by Tennessee, Alabama and New York.

In aggregate, the Appalachian portion of each state realized growth in the assets of their foundations over the five year period. All but one state showed growth in total giving, with only Kentucky exhibiting a decline in giving, largely due a major change in one foundation.¹⁰ It should be noted, however, that strong growth in a state's "total giving" by foundations does not necessarily imply growth in actual grants awarded within the Appalachian portion of the state since "total giving" includes all gifts made in the United States. Appalachia's foundations paralleled national performance, as measured by the ratio of total giving to assets, with an average of 5 percent to 5.7 percent of total assets being paid out in grant awards in 1992 and 1996.¹¹

Trends by Type of Foundations

Six of the top 100 U.S. foundations as ranked by asset size are found in the region: Richard King Mellon Foundation in Pennsylvania; Howard Heinz Endowment in Pennsylvania; the McCune Foundation in Pennsylvania; the Park Foundation in New York; Kate B. Reynolds Charitable Trust in North Carolina; and Vira I. Heinz Endowment. All of these foundations have assets values in excess of $360 million. Only the Howard Heinz Endowment appears in the top 100 U.S. foundations as ranked by total giving, with Heinz ranking 55th with awards totaling nearly $29 million in 1996.¹²

The MacLellan Foundation of Tennessee just missed making the top rankings, with $353 million in assets and nearly $8 million in grants in 1996. Meanwhile, two major foundations within the Region that are significant contributors to organizations within Appalachia are the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation of North Carolina, with assets of $341 million and total grants of $9.4 million, and the Claude Worthington Benedum Foundation with assets of $252 million and total grants of over $10 million in 1996.

Two Appalachian-based community foundations were found among the top twenty-five of major community foundations ranked by assets, with the Pittsburgh Foundation ranked seventh, and the Foundation for Carolinas in North Carolina ranked 24th. In total giving the Foundation for Carolinas ranked 13th and the Pittsburgh Foundation ranked 20th.

In addition to these players, several significant community foundations are also located in the Region, including the Winston-Salem Foundation in North Carolina with assets of $106 million and grants of over $9 million and the Greater Birmingham Foundation in Alabama with assets of $58 million and grants of nearly $4 million in 1996. Furthermore, there are numerous smaller community foundations throughout the Region, including for example, the Erie Community Foundation in Pennsylvania with assets of nearly $62 million and grants of over $2 million; the East Tennessee Foundation in Tennessee with assets of nearly $27 million and grants of over $4.5 million; and the Coshocton Foundation in Ohio with assets of over $9 million and grants of nearly $500,000. Overall, there are 35 community foundations reported in the Appalachian Region (see Appendix B for the complete listing of all types of foundations).

Among the top 50 corporate or company-sponsored foundations, there are only two major foundations in the Region: the Alcoa Foundation in Pennsylvania, with assets of $323 million and total grants of nearly $13 million; and the Alabama Power Foundation, with assets of nearly $127 million and total grants of over $7 million. The next largest corporate or company-sponsored foundation is the PNC Bank Foundation, with assets of $31 million and total grants of $10.5 million in 1996. Overall there are 110 corporate or company-sponsored foundations in Appalachia listed in the 1996 Guide to U.S. Foundations with grants of $1,000 or more.

In 1996, there were 21 Appalachian-based foundations with assets of $100 million or more, 122 foundations with assets of at least $10 million, and 1,320 of the 1,974 total foundations reported in Region with assets of $1 million or more. In terms of giving, there were 90 foundations that gave $1 million or more, 239 that gave at least $250,000 and about one-third that gave less than $10,000 in 1996. The top 100 foundations in the Region generally funded projects in several different fields of interest, although the overall pattern seems to reflect the national trends favoring education, followed by human services, health, community and civic improvement, and the arts and humanities. Among the smallest foundations there is an evident pattern of interest in education and scholarship funds. By and large, however, the vast majority of the foundations are independent, family-funded operations usually dedicated to a few areas of interest.

Distribution of Foundations in Appalachia

As the foregoing analysis shows, the Appalachian Region's foundation base is very unevenly distributed among states. Many states with large populations shares in the Region have a very low foundation base as measured by their amounts and shares of assets and total giving, especially Georgia, Kentucky, Ohio and West Virginia. Other states with lower population bases have very small shares, particularly Maryland, Mississippi and Virginia. In contrast, Alabama, New York and Tennessee have relatively large shares of foundation assets and total giving, but the shares are smaller than their population base within the Region. South Carolina has realized rapid growth in its foundation base, but still has a smaller share when compared to its population base. Of course, Pennsylvania and North Carolina are preeminent, with both states having more than twice their population share in foundation assets and total giving.

The distribution of the number of foundations within the Region is slightly more even than the asset distribution. Nonetheless, there is still a considerable gap between the number of foundations within the states and their respective population bases.

While the assets and total giving by foundations within the Appalachian portions of the states have all exhibited growth over the 1992-96 period, some states may not have realized any benefit through increased grant awards to the Region. Indeed, there is a striking difference in the states' foundation assets as reported in Table 2, and the dollar value of grants reported in Table 1. While each table measures different aspects of giving, taken together, the data suggests that some states may not have realized an increase in the amount of grants awarded to organizations in the Appalachian portion of the state, even though the assets and total giving of foundations within their boundaries have grown over the period. Ohio in particular stands out as both the assets and total giving by foundations located in Appalachian Ohio grew substantially over the five-year period. Nonetheless, actual grants awarded to Appalachian Ohio during this period declined significantly. To a lesser extent, the data show a similar discrepancy for Tennessee. While part of this discrepancy can be attributed to the different coverage within each data base,¹³ a comparison of the trends does suggest that regionally based foundations may not have increased their awards in the Region.

In this context, the initiative to launch the Foundation for Appalachian Ohio as a regional foundation to serve the 29 Appalachian counties in the state is a direct way to build assets, attract more foundation endowment into the region, make grants, and increase the capacity of the local communities to win more grants from other foundations. Furthermore, the role of such a regional foundation would be to increase the awareness of the need for more philanthropic investments in Appalachian Ohio, particularly by other Ohio-based foundations that do not currently make grants to organizations in the sub-state region. In 1996, only about 2.5 percent of Ohio's foundation assets and grants were held in or made to the Appalachian portion of the state.¹⁴ The ambitious goal of the Foundation for Appalachian Ohio is to build an asset base of $50 million, which would make it the largest foundation within 29 county region, and put it into the top 25 foundations in the state.¹⁵

The strategy of forming regional foundations within the Appalachian portions of the states is an important way that communities could build local assets and capacity to increase the grant flow to help meet their local needs. Already several Appalachian states, such as Tennessee's East Tennessee Foundation and North and South Carolina's Carolina Foundation have regional and community foundations that focus on enhancing regional endowments and the volume of grants. The proposal advanced by the East Tennessee Foundation for establishing a Central Highlands Community Foundation is another example of efforts to enhance the philanthropic support for the most distressed counties in Appalachia. In addition, several major national foundations such as The Ford Foundation and The Lilly Endowment have sought to encourage the formation of community foundations, as a means for building civic capacity, local assets and to stimulate the inflow of grants, particularly in distressed regions.

These strategies and efforts to promote the formation of regional and community foundations could help to rectify some of the deficiencies in the Appalachian Region. Another approach has been undertaken by ARC to stimulate the inflow of grants in Appalachia by enhancing the grant-raising capabilities of regional economic development organizations and their networking with foundations to promote their collaboration between Local Development Districts and community-based organizations in Region.

V. Enhancing the Fundraising Potential of ARC's Local Development Districts and their Affiliated Non-profit Organizations

A key concern of the Appalachian Regional Commission is whether the Local Development Districts (LDDs), and their affiliated non-profit organizations within the Region, have been successful in raising funds through private foundations. Furthermore, there is an interest to know what could be done to increase the grant awards going to LDDs, their affiliated organizations and other regional community-based organizations. In parallel efforts to address these questions, ARC initiated research on the patterns of foundation funding for the LDDs and began planning regional conferences for building fundraising skills for the LDDs. Each of these efforts yielded important results.

Regional Conferences for Building Fundraising Skills and Partnerships

In the summer of 1998, the Appalachian Regional Commission (ARC) co-sponsored with the Development District Association of Appalachia (DDAA), the W.K. Kellogg Foundation and the Rural Local Initiatives Support Corporation (LISC) three conferences to build the skills needed for successful fundraising from foundations and foster partnerships among regional development organizations. ARC was particularly interested in enhancing the fundraising skills of its 71 Local Development Districts (LDDs) in the Appalachian Region.

Over 300 people attended the three conferences, including ARC and LDD representatives, foundation officers, and community development advocates.¹⁶ The first was convened in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania on August 16-18, 1998, the second in Kingsport, Tennessee on September 13-15, 1998, and the third in Birmingham, Alabama on October 4-6, 1998. Altogether, about 70 percent of the LDDs were represented at the three conferences. Each of the conferences provided both training to the staff members of the LDDs and networking opportunities with major foundations and regional funders.

Major private foundations made presentations, including representatives from W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Ford Foundation, J.C. Penny Foundation, Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation, and the Heinz Endowment. Representatives from the private foundation stressed the need for development organizations of all kinds to form partnerships and collaborations in order to increase their effectiveness and chances for successful fundraising. Many of the foundations noted that they would be supporting proposals from multi-partner, community-based projects.

Company-sponsored foundations and companies were also represented, including Alabama Power Foundation Inc., the Fannie Mae Foundation, Bell Atlantic, Bell South, the Levi-Strauss Foundation, and the Hitachi Foundation. Many of these company-sponsored foundations noted that they have a very specific regional focus for their grant making, and that they preferred to fund multi-partner projects. Community foundations that participated, such as the Community Foundation of Pittsburgh, the East Tennessee Foundation, the Spartanburg County Foundation, and the Community Foundation of Greater Birmingham, also emphasized the geographic scope of their grant making activities.

Several significant financial institutions participated in the meeting, including the Federal Home Loan Banks of Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, PNC Bank N.A. from Pittsburgh, Bank One from Ohio, AmSouth Bank from Huntsville, Alabama, Self Help from North Carolina, and Appal BANC from Berea, Kentucky. The overall thrust of these private sector participants was that they stood ready to help through their philanthropic agencies or their Community Reinvestment Departments and that leveraging of resources was important in their funding and philanthropic decisions.

Jesse White, Federal Co-chairman of the Appalachian Regional Commission, said that “it was vital for all participants in the development activities of the Appalachian Region to work together, as neither the federal, state nor local governments could act alone could to overcome the barriers that remain.” Furthermore, Dr. White noted that “there is little prospect of any real growth in the commitment of government dollars to address the development challenges of the Region.” For these reasons, he argued, “partnerships among community-based organizations and all levels of government were necessary to increase the effectiveness of projects and to increase their potential to attract other sources of private investment, including foundation grants.”

Successful collaboration was a recurrent theme at the 36 plenary, break-out sessions and workshops. Numerous examples of innovative projects were presented from a range of projects including commercial and housing development, telecommunications, health care, micro-enterprise and entrepreneurship, youth and education. These exemplary projects all involved collaboration among service providers and included the participation of the beneficiaries of the projects.

Overall, the conference demonstrated the importance of collaboration in improving the effectiveness of government and community-based organizations. Moreover, the conference provided training for LDD members on forming partnerships and securing grant funding, and provided a networking opportunity for all of the participants. In addition, a survey was conducted by the conference organizers of participants from the LDDs that identified issues and specific needs for capacity building.

Survey of LDDs Capacity and Needs The survey conducted at the conferences generated useful information about perceived barriers to fundraising and the opportunities and challenges for successfully increasing private foundation fundraising.¹⁷ Of the 48 LDDs that attended the conferences, 27 completed the questionnaire.

1. Barriers to fundraising The principle barrier perceived by LDD representatives was the lack of information and experience in working with foundations. Another prominent factor cited was the limited resources, staffing and time available to do the outreach and proposal writing necessary to secure foundation grants. Furthermore, several LDDs noted that their status as government organizations placed restrictions on their ability to raise private funds, while others noted the lack of an affiliated non-profit organization with the 501(c)(3) tax status that could legally apply for such grants. Finally, as few LDDs noted that they were discouraged in their fundraising efforts by the prospects of significant competition with non-governmental organizations located within their region.

2. Challenges Significant challenges were identified by LDDs in their ability to work collaboratively with community-based organizations and community development corporations on joint projects and fundraising efforts. The principle concern was over the differences in the organizational standards, skills and priorities of governmental and non-governmental organizations. A related issue was how each type of organization internally established and managed its accountability for project management, with some LDDs suggesting that governmental organizations had higher accountability standards.

Another challenge was that some LDDs felt that there was a lack of familiarity and mutual understanding between community-based organizations and LDDs. By contrast other LDDs expressed concern over competitive issues with the community-based organizations in their areas, and cited turf issues as a barrier to collaboration. Despite these reservations expressed by many of the respondents, there were some LDDs that said there were no real barriers in working with community-based organizations and that they already had active relationships and collaborations.

3. Opportunities In spite of the foregoing reservations and challenges, many LDDs expressed a real interest in exploring how to strengthen collaboration, particularly through joint sharing of resources and training, as well as leveraging more funding for projects that were of mutual interest. Some saw opportunities emerging around concrete projects that potentially could form the basis for approaching foundations with collaborative proposals. Several saw both the opportunity and need for more networking between LDDs and community-based organizations to stimulate collaboration and to explore the potential for joint projects and fundraising. Others noted that cooperation with community-based organizations could broaden the base and vision of LDDs and that some community-based organizations could help expand contact with citizen groups.

4. Extent and Types of Collaborations Most LDDs reported several different types of collaborative efforts, ranging from projects with other economic development organizations such as community development corporations, to community and human service organizations like the United Way, to housing groups or the Chambers of Commerce. The majority of LDDs reported three or more current collaborative efforts and there were only two that reported no current collaborations.

5. Foundation Funding In response to the question about how much foundation support the LDDs had received in the 1993-1998 period, half of the reporting LDDs answered that they had received no foundation funding, while the other half had received some funding. Only four had noted that they had received three or more grants. This performance is very similar to that found in a search of the Foundation Center's data base on grants made by the top 1,000 private foundations of awards of at least $10,000; a topic to which we will now turn.

Foundation Grants to ARC's Local Development Districts and their Affiliated Non-profit Organizations

ARC commissioned the Foundation Center to analyze grant-making by the top 1,000 private foundations of awards of at least $10,000 made to the Local Development Districts and their affiliated non-profit organizations during the 1988 to 1997 period. To accomplish this task, ARC requested that the LDDs help compile a list of non-profits or foundations affiliated with the LDDs to receive grants. This survey showed for the first time that there were the 99 non-profits organizations or foundations affiliated with the LDDs and that all but three of the thirteen Appalachian states had non-profits or foundations. Since Alabama, Maryland, and Ohio did not have non-profits affiliated with their LDDs, these three states LDDs were included in the Foundation Center's search. Thus, a total of 110 organizations were researched, with the results reported in Table 3.

Grant Award Findings for the 1988-1997 Period

The Foundation Center's search of grants of $10,000 or more by the top 1,000 foundation awards found only 12 grants awarded to 8 of the 110 LDD-affiliated organizations over the 1988 to 1997 period. A total of $741,000 in grants was awarded to eight different organizations, with the smallest grant amounting to $10,000 and the largest being $250,000. It is noteworthy, however, that this search covers only grants over $10,000 in size made by the top 1,000 foundations, and therefore excludes the smaller grants that are often given by large and small foundations. Thus, it is very likely that the total number and value of grant awards to LDDs is greater than reported here. Nonetheless, the number of awards does track closely with the survey results which indicate a relatively low level of grant awards, especially given the substantial number of non-profit organizations that were researched.

Most grants went to organizations within the same state in which the grant-making foundation was located. As Table 4 shows, the Robert W. Woodruff Foundation gave the largest grant for $250,000, which went to Atlanta Regional Commission as shown in Table 3. There were a few out-of-state grants awarded by the Ford and Janirve

Foundations. In general the grant types conform to the ARC strategic goal areas, with community and economic development accounting for the majority of grant awards, while housing awards represented the second category of funding.

What is striking about these results is the low level of grant awards reported going to the LDDs and their affiliated non-profit organizations. Given the large number of LDD non-profit affiliates, one would have expected that these organizations would be able to capitalize on this institutional capability to apply for foundations grants. As the list in Appendix C indicates, the LDDs report having an extensive array of specialized non-profits, including several community development corporations, housing organizations, and affiliated foundations capable of securing funding for regional re-granting activities. Only Pennsylvania, however, actually reported the federal tax status of the affiliated non-profits, so it may be the case that several of the affiliated LDD organizations do not actually have federal non-profit or foundation status.

Nonetheless, the capacity apparently exists in most states to greatly expand their foundation fundraising efforts through their respective non-profits and foundations. Kentucky possesses 17 affiliated organizations, North Carolina and Pennsylvania both have 15 affiliates, Tennessee and Virginia both have 12, New York, Georgia and Mississippi have several affiliates, and South Carolina has two non-profits. Thus, the LDDs possess the tax exempt organizations necessary to pursue foundation funding.

VI. Findings, Issues and Implications

Major Findings

Most Appalachian states gained in the number and volume of grants awarded within the Region during the 1990s, with eight states registering gains in the total dollar volume of grants to the Appalachian sub-state areas, and seven showing gains in the number of grants. Nonetheless, there was some slippage in Ohio and traditionally stronger states such as North Carolina and Tennessee.

Grant trends within states and cities reveal a high concentration of awards in the largest cities in the Region and in those cities with a higher density of universities and non-profits. Pennsylvania and Pittsburgh stand out as the dominant state and city within the Region. On a per capita basis, the Region as a whole has a grant share that is far lower than the national average, with Appalachia posting a $13.69 in per capita grant awards compared to the national rate of $24.50 in 1996.

In 1996 the Region had nearly 2,000 foundations, which represented a growth of 17 percent over 1992, and assets grew by 47 percent to $11.9 billion, while total giving rose by 29 percent to $592 million. Appalachia's foundation assets have experienced solid growth in all of the states, and the pay-out of grants relative to assets parallels that of the national rate in the 1990s.

Only six of the top 100 private foundations as ranked by asset size are found in Appalachia, while only two of the top 25 community foundations are located in the Region. Among top the 50 company-sponsored foundations, only two are Appalachian based. Overall there are 21 Appalachian-based foundations with assets of $100 million or more. Despite the robust growth in the assets of Appalachian foundations, the data suggest that the Region may not have benefited as grant awards to the Region have not grown at a similar pace.

Research on the grant-raising performance of the Local Development Districts reveals a fairly low level of awards during the 1988 to 1997 period. While this data is not definitive, coupled with the survey results from responding LDDs, the information indicates a relatively modest level of effort in the fundraising field. Furthermore, given the existing non-profit affiliates that the LDDs possess, there seems to be significant institutional potential to expand the grant raising effort.

Fundraising Opportunities, Capacity-building and Partnerships Issues

Major foundation involvement in ARC's foundation conferences represents a commitment to explore ways to expand funding opportunities in the Appalachian Region. Yet, representatives from the foundations made clear that future progress depended on the building up of capacity within the LDDs and the development of partnerships with other community-based organizations within the Region. Furthermore, the LDDs' lack of experience in working with foundations will require additional networking opportunities with foundations, as well as with potential partners. All of this raises the question of what venues will be available to further develop this experience, networking and partnership opportunities.

Clearly, most partnerships will have to evolve out of the local and regional context in which the LDDs operate. Nonetheless, there does seem to be a need for further training and sharing of experiences on how to manage joint projects and the accountability issues associated with these types of collaboration. In addition, collaboration requires that joint projects hold a promise for actually expanding potential funding in a given region, rather than creating competition over an existing stream of funding. Another set of issues pertains to increasing the effectiveness of the existing array of non-profits and foundations already affiliated with the LDDs. The most immediate opportunity for expanding fundraising is for the LDDs to focus on foundations within their respective states, particularly those that fund in the issue areas associated with their non-profits. As the foregoing analysis of Appalachian-based foundations has shown, the growth in assets has been considerable and there does seem to be a greater chance of winning grants from foundations located in an organization's own state. Perhaps, future LDD conferences could host sessions on such follow up issues.

On a region-wide scale, the strategy of forming community or regional foundations within the Appalachian portions of the states is an important way that communities could build local assets and capacity to increase grant flow. While there are several notable efforts already underway within the Region in Ohio and Tennessee, there is a need for each state and sub-state region to examine the real potential in pursuing this strategy. Given the expressed interest of several major foundations like Ford and the Lilly Endowment to encourage the formation of community foundations, this route seems promising.

Several issues stand out as key areas of concern for foundation fund raising priorities. At the three conferences, topic areas included community youth programs, microenterprise and entrepreneurship, community health care, telecommunications projects, and a variety of community and housing development efforts. In funding priorities, several major foundations have made a concerted commitment to work on welfare reform, especially because of their concerns that welfare-to-work programs may be creating a larger population of working poor. In addition, some foundations have recognized the challenge of job creation in distressed counties as one of the most daunting obstacles to achieving self-sufficiency.

In this context, there seem to be significant opportunities for further collaborative work between ARC, the LDDs and foundations to address systematic gaps in the evolving system of welfare-to-work, focused efforts on community and human resource development in the most distressed counties in the region, and complementary investments in promoting entrepreneurship.

² Foundation Center. Foundation Giving, 1998 Edition. “1996 Giving and Growth.” <http://fdncenter.org/trends/fg8.high.html>. 11/3/98. One should note that the difference between the percentage share of foundation giving (13.3 percent of $150 billion in 1996) includes set-asides, administrative and program expenses, qualifying distributions and other expenses not included in the foundation grant awards figure of $13.8 billion in 1996.

⁵ Foundation Center, FC Search, The Foundation Center’s Database on CD-ROM, User Manual, 1998. pp.32-33.

⁷ The data is drawn from special tabulation of the Foundation Center’s The Guide to U.S. Foundations, 1997 edition, supplied by the Foundation Center under contract with the Appalachian Regional Commission in Spring of 1998.

¹¹ See the Foundation Center’s Foundation Giving, 4th Edition, 1994 and 8th Edition, 1998 for summary statistics on all foundations’ assets and giving. In 1992 all U.S. foundations had assets of $176.8 billion and total grants of $10.2 billion, and in 1996 they had assets of $267.6 billion and total grants of $13.8 billion. By comparison, in 1992 Appalachian foundations are reported to have assets of $8.1 billion and total grants of $459 million, and in 1996 $11.9 billion in assets and $592 million in grants.

¹² See The Foundation Center, The Top 100 U.S. Foundations Ranked by Total Assets and Total Giving, at <http://fdncenter.org/trends/fdgiv.html>.

¹⁵ The top twenty-five rankings in Ohio were based on a database search for those Ohio-based foundations with assets of $50 million or more in FC Search, The Foundation Center's Database on CD-ROM. Version 2.1, The Foundation Center, 1998.
