
From: Kevin B [REDACTED]
Posted At: Sunday, April 06, 2003 2:31 PM
Conversation: rule
Posted To: FeeRule
Subject: rule

After reading about the do not call list I feel this is the most highly ambiguous rule yet and don't believe this should be passed. There are way too many gray areas in this so far.

As a Realtor if the customer states they are on the no call list means nothing to me when i call them. If they are soliciting to sell their home and i call, the basis for my call is a result of their ad, therefore i am not telemarketing.

If i was telemarketing then so is everyone that is calling about the home. I may not be soliciting my business at the time of the call. If the seller is underpriced on the home I may actually be a buyer in this case and purchase it directly. This is just an example of one of the many gray areas of the no call list.

Even if they are on the no call list, How am I, the telemarketer supposed to know who is and who isn't because people can sign up daily and i may not even know that they signed up!

Sincerely,
Kevin Bahe