Commerce Announces Final Results in the Reconsideration of Sunset Review of Order on Large Newspaper Printing Presses from Japan

- On November 7, the Department of Commerce announced its final results of the reconsideration of the sunset review of the order on large newspaper printing presses (LNPP) from Japan.
- Commerce found that, had the antidumping duty order on LNPP from Japan not been revoked in February 2002 pursuant to the 2001-2002 sunset review, revocation of the order would have likely led to the continuation or recurrence of dumping.
- This sunset review is a reconsideration of Commerce's original sunset review conducted in 2001-2002. In that review, the sole domestic interested party, Goss Graphic Corporation (now Goss International Corp.), withdrew its participation in the review, leading Commerce to revoke the order.
- In 2004, an Iowa federal district court found that one of the Japanese LNPP producers subject to the original order, Tokyo Kikai Seisakusho (TKS), had submitted false information to Commerce in the 1997-1998 administrative review. Commerce's findings in that review, which were favorable to TKS, contributed to TKS ultimately being revoked from the order prior to the end of the original sunset review.
- Subsequent to the Iowa federal district court's 2004 findings, Commerce initiated a changed circumstances review to give parties an opportunity to provide comments to Commerce as to how it should take the court's findings into account. As a result of that review, Commerce decided to reconsider the original sunset review, finding that TKS' misconduct during the 1997-1998 administrative review may have significantly undermined the integrity of the results of the original sunset review.

NEXT STEPS

- Commerce will notify the International Trade Commission (ITC) of its findings. The ITC may then consider the matter of the continuation or recurrence of material injury. If the ITC makes an affirmative finding, Commerce could reinstate the antidumping duty order.
