Dear Sir:

I am writing in regards to the Federal Trade Commission's proposal to accept products that are made with only 75 percent domestic labor and materials and to give these such products the true "Made in the USA" labels. I feel that this proposal should not be accepted. I buy many products because they are made in the United States. These products are made by U.S. workers. The American people need jobs; we need to keep American factories working and to not keep downsizing. When you go to the store today for a purchase, many of our products being sold (the majority) are not made in the United States. The majority of these products are not made as well, and their durability and their longevity are lessened. Foreign countries are very much profiting by the American people. The hard-working American people need to profit more from our American bountiness.

I urge the Federal Trade Commission to keep the current standards for "Made in the USA" labels. I want to keep purchasing products that are "truly made" in the USA. The United States is a great place to live, and we need to group together. By helping each other in the United States, our strength will be increased.
