I have problems tracking down copyright holders all the time. I am a volunteer at a free online encyclopedia called Wikipedia. We try to exhibit images and other multimedia files that are either in the public domain, or whose authors agree to allow Wikipedia to display them according to the terms of our license. Sometimes people upload images to Wikipedia that they believe are in the public domain, but are not sure. I am one of many volunteers who pores over the images to try to determine their origins and copyright statuses. It is a very difficult task, and anything US Copyright Office could do to make this easier would be appreciated
