

To whom it may concern,

I really disagree with this because I think that our copyright laws work fine. Also any new act that gives more power to the copyright holders is wrong. Any law that can thwart the ability of libraries and museums to archive information is wrong because libraries and museums rely partly on receiving information this way and to deny that information is to deny many people this free access. It could even interfere with education and research, this is crazy the only reason this law was passed was for the copyright holders to make some more cash. I do though agree with making DVD copying illegal. My reason for this is that the movies on the DVD's are a group of people's work and allowing someone to copy that work would totally defeat the purpose of their job. In other words, if you allowing people to copy DVD's your defeating the purpose of the DVD as a product and making it some kind free software.

Sincerely,

Ryan Byrne
