The finance program includes professional field electives in investments, corporate finance, financial institutions, risk management, real estate finance and corporate law. While studying in these areas, you may take courses in corporate finance, international financial systems and foreign exchange, investments, liquidity and working capital management, and the U.S. banking system. You also may study corporation law and risk management, employee benefit programs, life insurance, management of financial institutions, and real estate investments. UNT's finance program will give you a good theoretical base as well as practical, applicable knowledge that can be used immediately in business.

Professionals in finance use their expertise in financial management, accounting, economics, mathematics and statistics to help run successful businesses. By studying finance, you may become a budget analyst, financial planner or financial manager for a business, government agency or nonprofit organization. You may work for a brokerage house as a stockbroker or you could own a private practice.
