Remarks:

Coast Guardsman Earl Cunningham lost his life on 8 February 1936 in the performance of duties. Cunningham, a Boatswain's Mate Second Class died while trying to save two of five fishermen marooned on an ice floe in Lake Michigan. He volunteered to take a smallboat out to the floe, after Coast Guardsmen had rescued three of the fishermen earlier. He reached the floe and took the two off, but heavy wind, snow, and choppy waters prevented his boat from escaping shore. One man escaped to tell the story, but Cunningham and the other man were found four days later, frozen to death. In his memory, an apartment building on Governors Island has been named after Earl Cunningham.
