State and Federal Depository Libraries in North Texas

State and federal depository libraries allow the citizens of North Texas free access to government information – from agriculture to zoology, congressional hearings to federal and state regulations, business statistics to vital statistics. The libraries included in this brochure have been designated as state or federal depositories and are located in North Texas.

State Depository Libraries

In 1975 a formal depository library program was established to disseminate state publications. The Texas State Library, however, actively collected state materials from its beginning and has informally distributed publications to other libraries prior to 1975. Not all publications are sent to state depositories. Only the Texas State Library has a complete collection, but some of the libraries acquire publications not distributed to them.

Federal Depository Libraries

Each congressional representative may designate 2 libraries as selective depositories for their district. Additionally, 1 or 2 libraries in each state are designated as regional depository libraries. Selective depositories choose what they receive from the government, based on the needs of their congressional district. The relative size of each collection is given as S, M, or L. Also listed are the congressional district each serves and the date of designation as a depository.
