2008 Stewardship Food Directory

Keeping the land and people together.

Safe, affordable, sustainable, healthy, and delicious – the benefits of local sustainable food are clear. All around us and all year long, family farmers are working hard to bring us a variety of locally produced food and fiber while caring for the land.

LSP members are building a sustainable food and farming system by training the next generation of farmers, organizing to advance proactive policies, building local food infrastructure and increasing access to healthy food.

Making environmentally and socially just food choices is an important part of building this system. The Stewardship Food Directory is designed to help you find good food from LSP members who are caring for the land.

The 2008 Stewardship Food Directory (formerly called the Stewardship Food Network) is a listing of Land Stewardship Project farmer members who sell food and other products directly to consumers or through local retailers. Businesses that support sustainable agriculture and family farmers with their purchases are also listed.

Inside you'll find all kinds of meats, vegetables and farm products such as candles, yarn, and flowers, all locally produced by Land Stewardship Project members. This year's directory has more listings than ever before and includes product and alphabetical indexes to help you find what you are looking for.

Sustainable farming takes many forms, and Land Stewardship Project members use a variety of methods to advance stewardship of the land. The farmers listed here use many different practices, and we encourage you to contact them to learn more about their farms. Some agricultural practices, such as organic production and grassfed livestock, are listed in the guide. A list of useful definitions and certification agencies used in the directory is in the box below.

Thank you for taking the time to learn more about buying food locally from Land Stewardship Project members. If you have questions about the guide or would like to be listed in the next edition, please contact me.

Take action for family farms and the environment. Join the Land Stewardship Project today!

We invite you to become a member of the Land Stewardship Project and join others in building a food and farming system that cares for people and the land.

Whether they are educating the next generation of farmers, organizing to stop factory farms, winning passage of policies to protect the environment, or increasing peoples' access to healthy local food, Land Stewardship Project members are at the front of the sustainable agriculture movement.

Land Stewardship Project members come from farms, small towns, and big cities across Minnesota and the upper Midwest. They are committed to creating an agriculture that is environmentally sound and socially just every step of the way – from the soil and water, to the farmworker and farmer, to the processor and retailer.

Some of the Land Stewardship Project's accomplishments include:

- Training more than 350 people in sustainable farming practices and farm management.
- Leading a successful campaign to enact federal farm programs that advance stewardship on working farmland.
- Protecting the rights of citizens to stop factory farms from moving into their communities through the use of township and county ordinances. LSP members have stopped more than 30 factory farms in Minnesota.
- Working with schools, hospitals, and other community institutions to purchase healthy local food from farmers who are caring for the land.
