Course Description:

This course explores the relationships between environment and health through historical, anthropological, and sociological perspectives that highlight 1) the role of illness in shaping changing perceptions of the environment and 2) the impact of environmental change in transforming medical, scientific, and lay understanding and experience of health and illness. How, for example, did the encounter of settler societies with new lands alter medical and popular conceptions of illness? In what ways did diseases contribute to historical patterns of settlement and conquest? How has the rise of emerging diseases shaped visions of the global environment? What historical role have issues of class, gender, and race played in the inequitable distribution of pollution and in activist involvement in combating environmental hazards of the city and workplace? And in what ways has living in toxic environments altered experiences of identity, health, and place? These are just a few of the themes touched upon by this course.

Expectations:

This course is based on a seminar-discussion format. Each one in class needs to assume the responsibility of an active participant and learner. Success in the class depends largely upon the time, energy, and commitment you invest. You will be required to arrive at class having read the material assigned for the day and prepared to engage in a thoughtful and constructive conversation that is respectful of others in the classroom and takes seriously the issues and themes presented in the readings.

If any problem arises, either academic or personal, that might jeopardize your performance in the course, you must try to inform me of the problem at the next available office hour, or by leaving a message with the Department of Medical History and Bioethics (262-1460).

In compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act, I urge any student in this course with a disability to inform me as soon as possible, so that I may make any necessary accommodations to ensure full participation and facilitate your educational opportunities. All such requests are confidential.

Students are expected to familiarize themselves with the UW policies on plagiarism and to assume responsibility for honesty in all course work.

Writing Fellows:

We are fortunate to have two peer writing tutors, called Writing Fellows, working with us this semester. Writing Fellows are skilled undergraduate writers, who have been selected by the Undergraduate Writing Fellows Program and trained to offer constructive criticism in the drafting process. They work one-on-one with each student by reading drafts, offering detailed comments, and meeting individually with each student to discuss how drafts can be improved.

The Writing Fellows will work with you on two assignments: one critical response paper and the film review. In each case you will submit a draft of your paper to me on the assigned due date. I will then give them to the Fellow who will read and provide written comments. You will then meet with your Fellow to discuss the paper and strategies for the rewrite. These meetings are mandatory. You will then revise your paper and submit both the original draft and your revised version on the specified revision date. You should also include a cover sheet that briefly explains how you responded to your Writing Fellow's comments.

This is a wonderful opportunity. Having input from someone else before you submit your final draft will only improve the quality of your paper, and thus help your grade. While the Fellows have no special training in the content of the course, they are trained to help you develop a well-constructed and persuasive essay. We can all become better writers, and good writing means rewriting. Writing can also help clarify your own understanding of a particular idea or argument. So, make the most out of this experience. It is a rare opportunity to get feedback from others who have such a sincere interest in improving our prose.
