No Child Left Behind Empowers Families With Options

When a child's school has been identified as "in need of improvement" by the state in which it is located, one option a family has is to choose a better-performing public school or a public charter school.

Another option is for the student to receive free tutoring and after-school help.

Called "supplemental educational services" under NCLB, they are available to qualified low-income students.

Your child may be eligible for school choice or supplemental educational services.

To find out if your school is in need of improvement, contact either your local school district or the state department of education.
