Made in the U.S.A. Policy Comment:

PLEASE don't "dilute" the meaning of "Made in the U. S. A." I spend many hours looking for products to support the workers of this country, and in effect, myself! I understand the spiraling trend to have this just one big happy world family with EVERYONE having a piece of the wealth of the world, but really, don't we know that that is a joke? Will the manufactures go out of business if they aren't allowed to compromise on the quality of their product by hiring cheap labor somewhere else, and then lie to the consumer about where that product was made? I think not. In fact, you are on the border line of making the "Made in the U. S. A." label meaningless. If that is your goal, so be it. YOU are in the position of power to either protect what the label means, or, for whatever economic reasons and pressures you can't resist, that the common man is unaware of at the present, go ahead and allow the label to be a 3/4 truth one good sized step toward another endangered species extinction!

Sincerely,

Vicki L. Mildice
