

Comment #: 78

February 24 2004

Mr. Randolph Wine
Burgdorff Realtors
New Jersey
United States

As Realtors fill a vital role in locating an appropriate housing for our public, placing a restriction on the real estate professional has the effect of eliminating the agents' search for the best property suited for the client. If the proper property were always on the market this would not be an issue, but often it is a situation where the agent must do an exhaustive search to find a willing seller with the right property for their client.

Since housing is a basic need, we need to pay particular attention to enabling the agent to reach out and find the appropriate property for each and every client and fulfill the "American Dream."