

Comptroller of the Currency
Administrator of National Banks

US Department of the Treasury

Biographies

Daniel P. Stipano Deputy Chief Counsel

Daniel P. Stipano is the deputy chief counsel for the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency in Washington, D.C.

He served as acting chief counsel from October 2004 to August 2005.

As deputy chief counsel, Mr. Stipano supervises the OCC's Enforcement and Compliance, Litigation, Community and Consumer Law, and Administrative and Internal Law Divisions. He also supervises the OCC district counsel staffs in the OCC's Southern and Western Districts.

From 1995 to 2000, Mr. Stipano served as the director of the OCC's Enforcement and Compliance Division. In this position, he was responsible for taking administrative enforcement actions against national banks and their institution-affiliated parties. From 1985 to 1995, Mr. Stipano was an assistant director and staff attorney in the Enforcement and Compliance Division.

Mr. Stipano was a staff attorney at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission from 1983 to 1985 and an associate with the law firm of Jackson and Jessup, P.C., in Arlington, Va.

A member of the Virginia State Bar and the American Bar Association, Mr. Stipano is also a member of the Treasury Department's Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group and the National Interagency Bank Fraud Working Group.

Mr. Stipano received his juris doctor from the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, College of William and Mary in 1983. He also received a bachelor's of arts, summa cum laude, from Union College, in 1980, where he earned Departmental Honors in Political Science and was elected Phi Beta Kappa.

