SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

On March 8, 2007, the Agencies published for comment a proposed Statement on Subprime Mortgage Lending, 72 FR 10533 (Mar. 8, 2007) (proposed statement). The consumer protection portion of the proposed statement set forth recommended practices to ensure that consumers have clear and balanced information about the relative benefits and risks of certain adjustable rate mortgage (ARM) products. The proposed statement specifically indicated that consumers should be informed about issues relating to potential payment shock—i.e., significant increases in monthly payments that may occur when the interest rate adjusts to a fully-indexed rate—as well as other features that may be present in these loans, including prepayment penalties, balloon payments, pricing premiums for reduced documentation loans, and the borrower's responsibility for real estate taxes and insurance if not escrowed.

The Agencies revised the proposed statement based on the comments received, and recently published the final Statement on Subprime Mortgage Lending in the Federal Register (Subprime Statement). 72 FR 37569 (July 10, 2007). Like the Interagency Guidance on Nontraditional Mortgage Product Risks, 71 FR 58609 (Oct. 4, 2006), the Subprime Statement is applicable to all banks and their subsidiaries, bank holding companies and their nonbank subsidiaries, savings associations and their subsidiaries, savings and loan holding companies and their subsidiaries, and credit unions.

The Subprime Statement, including the consumer protection portion, provides recommended practices to assist institutions in addressing particular risks and consumer protection concerns raised by certain ARM products typically offered to subprime borrowers. Some industry group commenters on the proposal asked the Agencies to provide uniform disclosures for these products, or to publish illustrations of the consumer information contemplated by the Subprime Statement similar to those previously proposed by the Agencies in connection with nontraditional mortgage products. 71 FR 58609 (Oct. 4, 2006). The Agencies recently published final Illustrations of Consumer Information for Nontraditional Mortgage Products. 72 FR 31825 (June 8, 2007). As was done with those illustrations, the Agencies believe that it would be desirable to seek public comment before issuing these illustrations in order to determine the types of illustrations that would be most useful to consumers and institutions.

II. Proposed Illustrations

The Agencies believe that illustrations of consumer information may be useful to institutions as they implement the consumer information recommendations of the Subprime Statement. The Agencies appreciate that some institutions, including community banks, may prefer not to incur the costs and other burdens of developing their own consumer information documents to address the issues raised in the Subprime Statement, and could benefit from illustrations like those below.

Use of the proposed illustrations is entirely voluntary. Accordingly, there is no Agency requirement or expectation that institutions must use the illustrations in their communications with consumers.

Institutions seeking to follow the recommendations set forth in the Subprime Statement could, at their option, elect to:

- Use the illustrations;
- Provide information based on the illustrations, but expand, abbreviate, or otherwise tailor any information in the illustrations as appropriate to reflect, for example:

- the institution's product offerings, such as by deleting information about loan products and loan terms not offered by the institution and by revising the illustrations to reflect specific terms currently offered by the institution;

- the consumer's particular loan requirements or qualifications;

- current market conditions, such as by changing the loan amounts, interest rates, and corresponding payment amounts to reflect current local market circumstances; and

- other material information relating to the loan consistent with the Subprime Statement; or

- Provide the information described in the Subprime Statement, as appropriate, in an alternate format.

Whether or not an institution chooses to use the proposed illustrations, the Subprime Statement provides that communications with consumers, including advertisements, oral statements, and promotional materials, should provide clear and balanced information about the relative benefits and risks of certain ARM products. Further, product descriptions and advertisements are to provide clear, detailed information about the costs, terms, features, and risks of the loan to the borrower. In particular, the Subprime Statement indicates that “[i]nformation provided to consumers should clearly explain the risk of payment shock and the ramifications of prepayment penalties, balloon payments, and the lack of escrow for taxes and insurance, as necessary.”¹ Consumers also should be informed about any pricing premium associated with a stated income or reduced documentation loan program.

This recommended information could be presented as shown in the two illustrations set forth below. Illustration 1 is a narrative explanation of some of the key features of certain ARM loans that are identified in the Subprime Statement, including payment shock, responsibility for taxes and insurance, prepayment penalties, balloon payments, and increased costs associated with stated income or reduced documentation loans. The Subprime Statement indicates that information provided to consumers should clearly explain these features and their ramifications in a timely manner. Illustration 1 seeks to provide both the general and loan-specific information contemplated in the Subprime Statement in a format that could be used by creditors seeking to implement the consumer protection recommendations in the guidance. Creditors that use Illustration 1 should, of course, delete or modify the prepayment penalty or other language in the illustration in order to reflect the actual terms being offered. Illustration 1 is also intended to enable creditors to implement the Subprime Statement with minimal burden.

Illustration 2 is a chart with numerical examples that is designed to show the potential consequences of payment shock in a concrete, readily understandable manner for a loan structured with a discounted interest rate for the first two years. Illustration 2 provides information on payments for an ARM loan, assuming caps on annual and aggregate interest rate increases based on typical terms in the market,² and information for a comparable fixed rate mortgage.

Creditors could satisfy the consumer information recommendations by simply photocopying the illustrations (after making any necessary deletions or modifications) and distributing them to consumers in a timely manner. In addition, once the Agencies adopt illustrations as final, to assist institutions that wish to use them, the Agencies will post them on their respective Web sites in a form that can be downloaded, modified as appropriate, and printed for easy reproduction.

III. Request for Comment

The Agencies request comment on all aspects of the proposed illustrations. We ² The ARM loan in Illustration 2 assumes a start rate of 7 percent, an initial index of 5.5 percent and a margin of 6 percent. It assumes annual payment adjustments after the initial discount period, a 3 percent cap on the interest rate increase at the end of year 2, and a 2 percent annual payment adjustment cap on interest rate increases thereafter, with a lifetime payment adjustment cap of 6 percent (or a maximum rate of 13 percent). It also assumes no change in the index through year 4.

encourage specific comment on whether the illustrations, as proposed, would be useful to institutions, including community banks, seeking to implement the “Consumer Protection Principles” portion of the Subprime Statement, or whether changes should be made to them. We also encourage specific comment on the following: whether the illustrations, as proposed, would be useful in promoting consumer understanding of the risks and material terms of certain ARM products, as described in the Subprime Statement, or whether changes should be made to them. We also seek comment on whether the information in the proposed illustrations is set forth in a clear manner and format; whether these illustrations or a modified form should be adopted by the Agencies; and whether there are additional illustrations relating to certain ARM products that would be useful to consumers and institutions.

The Agencies are aware that individual institutions and industry associations have developed and are likely to continue developing documents that can be effective in conveying critical information discussed in the “Consumer Protection Principles” portion of the Subprime Statement. These illustrations are not intended to dissuade institutions and associations from developing their own means of delivering important information about these products to consumers. In this regard, the Agencies note that they have not conducted any consumer testing to assess the effectiveness of any existing documents currently used by institutions, or of the proposed illustrations set forth below. Commenters are specifically invited to provide information on any consumer testing they have conducted in connection with comparable disclosures.

Important Facts About Your Adjustable Rate Mortgage

Whether you are buying a house or refinancing your mortgage, this information can help you decide if an adjustable rate mortgage (ARM) is right for you. ARMs can be complicated. If you do not understand how they work, you should not sign any loan contracts, and you might want to consider other loans.

With an ARM, the interest rate on your loan is not fixed. Instead, it changes over time according to a formula – typically, a base interest rate (index) plus a certain percent (margin) (for example, the Prime Rate plus 3 percent). So, if the base interest rate increases, your interest rate and monthly payment will also increase.

Some specific terms of your ARM loan are explained below.

► Your loan will have a reduced initial interest rate.

Some ARMs have a reduced interest rate (start rate) for a short period of time – for example, the first two years of the loan. This rate is less than the index plus margin rate. This means that your interest rate and monthly payments will be lower than normal for the first two years. However, your interest rate and monthly payment may increase significantly when that period is over – even if market rates stay the same. And, your interest rate and monthly payment will increase even more if market rates rise.

► Your monthly payment will not include an amount to cover taxes and insurance.

In some mortgages, your monthly payment includes both principal and interest and an amount to cover real estate taxes and home insurance – and your lender pays your taxes and insurance out of these funds. In other mortgages, your monthly payment covers only principal and interest, and you are responsible for paying real estate taxes and insurance premiums when the bills arrive. When you are comparing mortgages, or deciding whether you can afford a mortgage, you need to consider whether or not the monthly payment includes an amount to cover estimated taxes and insurance.

► You will be required to pay a prepayment penalty if you pay off your loan more than 60 days before the initial interest rate is adjusted. The amount of the penalty will be a percentage of the outstanding balance of the loan.

Some ARMs require you to pay a large prepayment penalty if you sell your home or refinance during the first few years of the loan. A prepayment penalty can make it difficult, or very expensive, to sell your home or refinance – which you may need to do if your interest rate, and therefore your payment, is about to increase significantly.

► Your loan will have a balloon payment.

Most mortgages are set up so that you pay off the loan gradually by the monthly payments that you make over the loan term (for example, 30 years). Some ARMs, however, are set up with “balloon payments” – you make the same monthly payments that you would for a 30-year loan, but after a shorter period of time (for example, 10 years), the entire remaining balance of the loan is due. When the balloon payment is due you will usually need to refinance your loan to pay it, or sell your home if you cannot refinance the loan.

► Your loan will have a higher price because of reduced documentation.

“Reduced documentation” or “stated income” loans usually have higher interest rates or other costs compared to “full documentation” loans available if you document your income, assets, and liabilities. These higher costs can be substantial.
