State housing agency providing $20.9 million to Chambers County's Hurricane Ike recovery efforts

(AUSTIN) — Aiming to rebuild housing stock in the wake of Hurricane Ike and bolster the region's economy, the Texas Department of Housing and Community Affairs (TDHCA) and State Senator Tommy Williams today announced a major award of federal disaster recovery funds to Chambers County. In addition to helping replace damaged or destroyed housing units, the award will also provide a wide array of financial benefits to the region.

TDHCA awarded Chambers County officials $20.9 million in disaster recovery funds to repair or rebuild 180 owner-occupied storm damaged homes. The county will place a priority on applicants currently displaced from their primary residence, with an emphasis on assisting the elderly, disabled, single head of household, and household size.

This award is part of $1.3 billion in federal disaster recovery funds allocated to the state just over five months ago.

"Hurricane Ike devastated the entire region, and many Chambers County residents continue to live in severely damaged homes or have no home a year after the storm made landfall," said Senator Williams in making the announcement. "I am encouraged to see our state housing agency moving these funds so critical to our recovery efforts to an area of the state that truly needs the assistance."

"Texas took a direct hit from one of the most destructive hurricanes on record, and portions of the state are still reeling from the blow," said Michael Gerber, TDHCA Executive Director. "Our mission is to restore the region's housing stock in as rapid a manner as possible, which will help stabilize lives, create construction jobs, and generate taxes and fees for the county. By working through officials at the local level, TDHCA is ensuring the funds are directed to where they will have the greatest impact."

Hurricane Ike made landfall near Galveston on September 13, 2008, with a significant storm surge and winds topping out at 110 miles per hour. Damages have been estimated to run as high as $29 billion throughout a 34-county region of Southeast Texas.

On March 31, 2009, the Texas Department of Rural Affairs executed a grant agreement with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), accepting the $1.3 billion in disaster recovery funds to the State of Texas for hurricanes Ike and Dolly. Of this amount, approximately $620 million has been made available to TDHCA to administer housing programs related to the state's recovery efforts, with today's award to Chambers County representing a portion of these funds.

Under HUD regulations, 50 percent of federal disaster recovery funds targeting the rebuilding of homes damaged by Hurricane Ike must benefit low to moderate income households.
