Changing Globemaster IIs into Globemaster IIIs

Welcome to our annual almanac issue—hopefully, the most complete and up-to-date listing of AF Weather people and places you'll find. As I reflect on the progress we've made together since publication of our 1997 Almanac, I'd like to personally congratulate each of you for your contributions to one of the most dynamic and results-producing times in Air Force Weather history. Shifting directions and changing strategic course in today's fast-paced environment was tough. Yet, despite resource constraints and a substantial ops tempo, you handled it. In my opinion, you're an extremely talented and motivated group of professionals and what we've accomplished has been due to your initiative and hard work. You are a credit to the United States Air Force and to the Nation—I'm proud to be on your team.

The analogy that titles this article relates to the magnitude of what we've achieved. For those younger than I (that means most of you!), the C-124 Globemaster II was a four-engine, double-decker albatross of an airplane that was the backbone of our airlift fleet in the '50s and early '60s. It was big and slow, but given the technology of the day, it was a good aircraft that got the job done and it did great things for our country. Its namesake is the C-17 Globemaster III—the latest major addition to our airlift fleet. You are probably aware that the Air Force worked several years to bring the C-17 into the inventory. Now, it's the finest military cargo airplane in the air; worth its weight in gold when you need to project military forces; giving teeth to the mobility aspect of our USAF vision. While we'll probably never see a direct comparison of Globemaster II vs. Globemaster III capabilities, I'm certain the magnitude of the increase would be most impressive.

Air Force Director of Weather

comparable to the jump from C-124s to C-17s. We're transforming the basic organizational structures and technological architectures that served us well in the '60s, '70s, '80s and '90s into a vastly streamlined, more powerful capability—one that represents the very best that America has to offer. Before, we've often had to wait for the very best science—the latest innovations in communications and automation—to evolve into our weather infrastructure. We are neither willing, nor can we afford, to wait any longer. And because of your dedication and diligence, we don't have to!

Time and again, I've watched you deliver. You have reengineered our FOA to form the Air Force Weather Agency. You began standing up operational weather squadrons within 18 months of the time we conceived of them. You delivered high-resolution METSAT and tailored warfighter weather products as never before for customers from Southwest Asia to Korea and all points in between. You developed fine-scale, highly accurate model output placing it in the hands of our people supporting decisionmakers ranging from AF/Army operators in Bosnia and Southwest Asia to wing commanders trying to protect high value assets during CONUS severe weather episodes. You have done superbly while forming stronger ties with our civilian and Navy counterparts and leveraging the latest science from our universities and laboratories. Further, your efforts to revamp our officer and especially our enlisted career fields will directly improve our customer focus and the quality of our weather support. The list goes on and on, and you add to it every day.

Certainly we have been moving at a fast pace. We cannot afford to slow the pace of improvement—we must continue our efforts to ensure success. We'll expand our METSAT and model product lines and make them more accessible to worldwide operators. We'll refine the "reengineering" CONOPS that many of you helped conceive and then we'll convert it into operational policies and procedures. We'll continue to combine innovation with sound management practices and on-target leadership as we balance a limited budget and an undermanned career field. The race from concept to reality will still be rapid, but we'll prevail, because our people are superb and our course is correct.

So, sit back, relax for a minute, and be proud that you are a member of an Air Force Weather community that has stepped out as aggressively and as effectively as anyone in the USAF to meet the challenges of our modern military force. Then, take a deep breath, stretch, and get ready for the next round of this quest called Reengineering Air Force Weather. Hooah and THANKS!!
