My questions tomorrow will be simple. I am looking to find out about grass-roots advocacy programs for children with developmental disabilities. I would like to know, particularly now with the health care reform activity, what support there is for these programs and who's involved. Are they mothers, like Carol, who have entered the world of politics to improve the lives of their children and others?

(In keeping with the market of our magazine) Are Rehab therapists important to these programs?

Hope this helps. I'm still not positive what this articles about. I just want to feel out the subject, see where the ideas I run across lead me.

Comments:

I am attempting to put together a short piece on the rising tide of advocacy programs for developmental disabilities. I have read about your efforts and accomplishments and I would love to get your opinion about how things are working out, where changes in the current course of action need to be made, and what your hopes for the future suggest. I don't expect to take up more than 10-15 minutes of your time. Less if necessary. Please call me at (310) 306-2206 when you have the time. Thank You.
