Historical Films and Videos Duplication Restriction Notice

The audiovisual material(s) in the National Library of Medicine collection that you have requested to copy has been acquired from another Federal agency or donated by an individual or private organization. Where obvious copyright or donor-imposed restrictions apply, written releases from the owners are required before the recording can be placed in a laboratory for duplication and sale. Recorded items without such restrictions may be copied without prior permission. However, because of the changing copyright laws and interpretations and because of the ever present possibility of the existence of underlying but unrecorded copyrights, model releases, and performance rights, neither the agency of origin, the donor, nor the National Library of Medicine has the authority to transfer or assign property rights, and it may therefore be necessary to obtain permission from the owners of the property rights before any commercial or other use is made. Furthermore, the National Library of Medicine can make no guarantees, expressed or implied, and any use is at the researcher's or user's own risk.
